The Wall Street Disaster
Permanent High Rewards
A Courageous Boy
Better Than a Miracle

—By Arthur Brisbane—

Copyright, 1920.

Before the explosion two warnings were sent to men in Wall street. One was a vague warning, fixing no day; one definite as to the day, but fixing the hour of the explosion inaccurately.

These warnings seem to prove that a hideous crime had been discussed in the hearing of several. They discouraged the suggestion that the calamity may have been accidental, due to careless handling of high-power explosives.

Every day in New York and other cities you may see brightly painted red wagons going about with the warning "explosives" in red letters, as the only protection to the public. Such a wagon, it is said, was seen in Wall street shortly before the explosion. Collision with a street car, fire engine or speeding automobile out of control might cause such an "explosive wagon" to repeat Thursday's disaster at any time.

Such dangerous vehicles should be allowed to move about the street only after midnight, when traffic is low and the sidewalks empty. That would seem to be one lesson of the explosion.

It is said the explosion was caused by TNT, or picric acid, dynamite not having sufficient power to cause so much damage. Considering the power of those explosives, it should be possible to trace every ounce issued and check the use of it. If that cannot be done, proper regulation should be made for the future.

It is still possible, and every one will hope, that careless handling of explosives is to blame. To control carelessness is difficult in this country, but less difficult than control of criminal viciousness. Those guilty of carelessness, resulting in wholesale death, might be as careful as any other criminal to conceal guilt.

Possibility of criminal carelessness should not be dismissed without thorough investigation. The explosion is believed to have taken place inside some horse wagon or an automobile standing at the curb, both wrecked when the explosion occurred.

It would seem reasonable either to forbid or inspect most closely any parking of vehicles within the financial district.

After the Phoenix Park explosion in Ireland a law made it a felony for any person not authorized to have dynamite in his possession. Mere possession was sufficient proof of the crime.

Such a law should exist here, with a permanent offer of high rewards, with absolute secrecy for information, for any information leading to conviction under the law.

Criminals are talkative, especially political criminals, and given to boasting. Such rewards would help in crimes with which national and local authorities seem unable to cope. Conviction of any man planning wholesale murder would be well worth $100,000 or a million. There should be kept standing an offer of at least $50,000 for information leading to proof of intention and preparation to commit such a crime.

Even in this disaster the one bright spot is not lacking. James Saul, red-headed, seventeen-year-old office boy, stunned and cut by flying glass, pulled himself together, commandeered an abandoned auto, and with face and hands bleeding spent an hour driving wounded men to the hospital, turning over the automobile to the police when his work was done. Such a boy reassures you, if you are wondering what the country is coming to.

Pleasing also, after the explosion, was the sight of Washington's huge statue, standing before the Sub-Treasury Building, without a scratch, nine hundred millions in gold stored away in the back.

In ancient days the safety of the statue would have been called a miracle. The good would have said that God had saved the image.

Better than a miracle for modern purposes is the bronze Washington, untouched. As he went through that explosion so the government that he established can pass safely through a thousand disturbances, infinitely worse than any mere explosion. There is in this nation, as there was in Washington's character, power to resist all enemies and carry to success the plan made in 1776, which was the permanent establishment of real democracy.

The duty of the nation is to continue working at that task, undisturbed by crime in the gutter or elsewhere contempt for law, at the top or at the bottom of the social scale.

There is no need for panic. Only those whose consciences accuse them will take too seriously a story that was told when Ravaillac killed Henry the Fourth.

European countries are familiar with outbreaks of political crime that to us are new. England deals with the problem sanely, in her own territory, permitting practically unlimited freedom of speech in time of peace, interfering with most violent rasing only to prevent obstruction of traffic.

Lieut.-Gov. Cox Declares Officials Must Act if Private Capital Fails

A declaration by Channing H. Cox, candidate for Governor, that unless the housing situation in Massachusetts is relieved by private initiative governmental agencies will be compelled to make use of their constitutional powers for the purpose of providing homes for citizens, was one of the outstanding features of today's "platform" convention of Bay State Republicans.

Another feature of the convention was the opening or a new vein of Calvin Coolidge's dry humor.

Governor Coolidge was referring to President Wilson's demand for a "great and solemn referendum," on the question of the Wilson League, when he said that as Wilson watches the career of James M. Cox on the stump the "referendum must be getting solemn and more solemn."

Women, appearing at the State convention for the first time as delegates, accentuated the family spirit that seemed to pervade the Tremont Temple atmosphere. All the "stars" of the Grand Old Party were there, each apparently happy and confident.

Lord Mayor of Cork Completely Exhausted After Passing a Sleepless Night

BULLETIN

London, Sept. 18.—Terence MacSwiney, hunger striking Lord Mayor of Cork, passed a bad night, having been unable to sleep. He was completely exhausted early today, the thirty-seventh of his fasting.

"My brother is worse than I have ever seen him," said his sister, Mary, as she came out of the prisoner's cell in Brixton prison infirmary at 10:30 this morning.

Paris, Sept. 18.—"If Macswiney were released it would end all noticeable order in Ireland, but we are ready for merciless reprisals," Sir Nevill Macready, British commander-in-chief in Ireland, is quoted as saying in a dispatch to the Petit Parisien.

"If fifty individuals were shot, order would be restored in Ireland," the British commander is said to have added.

HARDING RAPS U. S. MEDDLING

Says America Has Been "Spilling Bad Manners and Bad Counsel"

Marion, O., Sept. 18.—Senator Warren G. Harding received delegations of several hundred foreign-born citizens today.

Senator Harding declared that meddling in the affairs of Europe for the last four years had accomplished little but "spilling bad manners and bad counsel all over the world," and promoting racial and class feeling in America.

"Let us all pray," he said, "that America shall never feel the menace of hyphenated citizenship. America does not want and does not ask that her foreign-born citizens forget the countries of their nativity, but we do ask all to serve America first.

"We are unalterably against any hyphenated Americanism. We have put an end to prefixes. The way to unite and blend foreign blood into the life stream of America is to put an end to groups.

"It is not beyond possibility that the day might come when an organized hyphenated vote in America might have the balance of voting power to elect our government. America would be delivered out of the hands of her citizenship, and her control might be transferred to a foreign capital abroad.

"This is of greater concern to you than to anyone else in the world."

SOMERSET TO HAVE BIG LEGION CARNIVAL.

Complete story with pictures of big event at Somerset's Centre street will be found in today's Boston Sunday Advertiser.

Hundreds of commuters on the Midland, Plymouth and Providence divisions of the New Haven road were delayed in reaching this city today, when two cars of an inbound Dorchester train, due at 7:45 daylight time, jumped the tracks just outside the trainshed at the South Station.

The forward truck of one of the cars ploughed deep into the ground, shaking up the passengers and effectively blocking traffic for nearly half an hour.

No persons were injured, but occupants of this and following trains were forced to disembark in the yards and walk to the station, in some instances a quarter of a mile. Many walked from the Back Bay Station.

The train, proceeding slowly, had reached what is known as "The Diamond," in the yards outside the shed, seeking an entrance to Track 20, when a loose brake beam is believed to have dropped beneath one of the wheels of a passenger car, derailing it.

The car, together with the one behind it, left the tracks and bumped along over the ties for several yards before the engineer brought the train to a stop.

The train was made up of an engine, baggage car and seven passenger coaches, and was piloted by Engineer Plunkett Underwood of Dorchester. The second and third cars left the rails, the steps at the rear of the second and front of the third being wrecked by the impact.

Girl Describes Driver of 'Death Wagon'

New York, Sept. 18.—Miss Rebecca Epstein, a stenographer, who was walking on Wall street, near William, about the time of the explosion, gave the police the following description of a man who drove the bomb wagon:

Aged about thirty-five or forty, had heavy growth of beard, wore brown overalls and slouch hat.

"He looked to me like an ordinary laboring man," said Miss Epstein. "I noticed that when he got off the truck his overalls were spattered with mud and some white substance. He did not hurry or seem excited."

A few minutes after the driver disappeared walking west on Wall street the explosion occurred.

FLYNN TAKES FULL CHARGE OF HUNT

Fifteen patrolmen and eight inspectors were detailed today to guard the banks in Lynn, following the receipt by Chief of Police Burckes of a "tip" to the effect that some of the buildings had been marked for destruction. Chief Burckes received the information from a prominent Lynn man identified with the banking interests.

New York, Sept. 18.—Chief William J. Flynn of the bureau of investigation of the Federal Department of Justice today took complete charge of the hunt for the bomb-makers who caused the deadly explosion outside the Morgan banking offices at Broad and Wall streets on Thursday.

Flynn is vested with complete authority from Washington, where it is believed only concentrated action will result in the arrest of the guilty.

He is in charge of at least eight subordinate groups of investigators. They include city and State police, private detectives and various Secret Service bodies.

Optimistic government men predicted results within a few days, as the most famous Secret Service men in the United States took up the trail. Flynn has been on the ground since shortly after the explosion. He is convinced that the tragedy was

DEMOCRATS ADOPT LEAGUE PLANK; IGNORE FREEDOM OF IRELAND

BARRY LEADS THE FIGHT FOR IRISH RECOGNITION

Springfield, Sept. 18.—What was announced by Joseph H. Ely as "a splendid victory for the Wilson administration," was consummated today, when the resolutions committee of the Democratic State convention adopted a platform plank indorsing the Wilson League of Nations and throwing the freedom of Ireland entirely into the discards.

While Ely was exulting over the victory achieved by the Wilson forces, former Lieutenant-Governor Edward P. Barry left the room in the Kimball Hotel where the resolutions committee had been in secret session more than five hours and announced with evident disgust that the platform plank agreed upon reads substantially as follows:

"The peace of the world must be insured by the adoption of the League of Nations and the first question to be taken up by such a league should be the question of the status of Ireland."

BARRY ALONE DISSENTS.

The plank was adopted by the resolutions committee composed almost entirely of and dominated by Ely and his officeholders, other friends of the Wilson administration and attaches of the Democratic State committee.

Barry alone dissented from the action of the committee, and will doubtless lead the fight on the floor of the convention to repudiate the league and to favor the recognition of the Irish republic.

THREE SEPARATE PROPOSALS.

Three separate proposals on the Irish situation had been made in public to the resolutions committee. They were:

1—The recognition plank, approved by President De Valera and advocated by the Massachusetts delegation to the San Francisco convention.

2—An eight-word recognition plank, stating positively, "We favor immediate recognition of the Irish republic."

3—A plank to allow the President to send an ambassador to Ireland when he "deems it to be in keeping with international comity and usage."

The recognition plank, identical in language with that which received the unanimous vote of the Massachusetts delegation in San Francisco after the aggressive campaign organized and waged by Martin H. Lomasney, Representative Thomas A. Mitchell and Attorney John F. Fitzgerald of Providence, was presented to the resolutions committee by Chairman Michael A. Collins of the Democratic state committee, who is also the party nominee for Lieutenant-Governor.

WALSH'S PROPOSAL.

"Mindful of the circumstances of the birth of our own nation, we reassert the principle that all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. We will support the continuance of our long-established and lawful practice of according recognition to any intervention in all cases where the peoples of a nation, as in Ireland, have by free vote of the people declared to the public and chosen a government to which they yield willing obedience.

Therefore, we pledge our party to the policy of according to the elected government of the Republic of Ireland full, formal and official recognition by the government of the United States, thus vindicating the principle for which our soldiers offered up their lives."

The eight-word plank was offered by Francis J. Finneran of Boston, who also submitted a separate plank of indorsement of the attitude of U. S. Senator David I. Walsh on the League of Nations.

During the five minutes public session of the resolutions committee the members were given to understand that the Irish question had passed beyond the stage where they are willing to tolerate mere expressions of sympathy or other forms of "pussy-footing."

"I came over to tell you," said Nellie Boland, "that the people of Holyoke, for example, are watching this convention and will not accept a straight-out recognition plank you can't carry Holyoke, which has been for years one of the strongest Democratic cities of the State."

PREDICTS PARTY'S DEFEAT.

Finneran gave them the unconfortable assurance that the Democratic ticket will be defeated by at least 200,000 plurality in November and that the only way the Irish vote they can save themselves from disastrous defeat is by remaining true to its principles and demonstrating whether the Wilson administration abandons those principles or not.

Three planks recommended by Mrs. Susan W. FitzGerald in behalf of the State League of Women Voters have already found their way into the party organization platform.

The first would place a further restriction on child labor by increasing the school age from 14 to 16.

The second indorses the principle of infancy and maternity care.

O'LEARY WILL NOT WITHDRAW.

The third recognizes the right of women to hold any positive or appointive office and is designed to prepare places for women on State boards which are supposed to have a particular interest in the welfare of women and minors in the State.

Chairman O'Leary thus far is holding firmly to his refusal to retire from the ticket and governorship and yield his place to Marcus A. Coolidge of Fitchburg or Joseph B. Ely of Westfield. To those who have made proposals to him he is said to have replied: "Why should I start at the head of the ticket?"

Coolidge and Ely were being mentioned for both first and second places but Walsh has let it be definitely understood that he is in the race to stay.

BROKER INDICTED IN STOLEN BONDS CASE

For the first time in the history of the city it will not be represented at a convention of a major political party.

TELLS OF NEED OF HOMES HERE

Channing H. Cox at G. O. P. Convention Says Officials May Have to Act

Coolidge, Lodge, Speaker Gillett, Congressman Treadway, Winslow, Page, Walsh, Fuller and Parkhill; there was a warm reception.

COX ON HOUSING.

This was what gubernatorial candidate Channing H. Cox had to say on the question of housing for the people:

"During the past few years the population has had a healthy growth but during that time only few new houses have been built. Our Commission on the Necessaries of Life is at present making a survey of the exact situation and their findings ought to be most valuable. However, the scarcity of modern tenements, apartments and houses is known by all. The high level of rises in rents has been general.

"At present the conditions are not such as to induce private capital to build more homes. The Legislature has passed legislation and numerous dealing with the relations of landlord and tenant.

The constitution has been amended for the purpose of allowing relief from congestion of population and providing homes for citizens and the Legislature has given cities and towns power to provide shelter for their inhabitants in case of public exigency, emergency or distress.

"If any of these laws in at once relieved by private initiative the governmental agencies will be compelled to make use of their constitutional powers, for it is certain that our citizens are entitled to decent habitations."

Lieutenant Cox promised that what he moves along to the next chair the State government will be the model of "thrift and economy" he revealed a great interest in the rural schools and their improvement and suggested that perhaps the State might help.

Therefore, we pledge our party to the policy of according to the elected government of the Republic of Ireland full, formal and official recognition by the government of the United States, thus vindicating the principle for which our soldiers offered up their lives."

The eight-word plank was offered by Francis J. Finneran of Boston, who also submitted a separate plank of indorsement of the attitude of U. S. Senator David I. Walsh on the League of Nations.

Bank Girls in Home Lunch Club

An every-noon scene at the National Shawmut Bank where the Bring-Your-Own-Lunch club has a large membership. Seen in the lunch-room, set apart for the women employes by the bank, are, left to right—Ella A. Smith, Greenwood; Florence Olsen, Roslindale; Caroline Keith, Lynn and Gertrude Hayes, Somerville.

Seventy-five girls employed by the National Shawmut Bank have joined the Bring-Your-Lunch-From-Home Club, thus materially reducing their cost of living and defeating restaurant profiteers. The girls now have much better lunches and, in addition to saving money, they gain a great deal of time for noon-day shopping.

Because of rising costs of food, President Alfred L. Aiken of the National Shawmut Bank agreed to place one of the finest rooms in the bank building at the disposal of the girls as a lunch room. Miss Ellen Lee, secretary to Aiken, and Miss Mary E. Worcester, head of the stenographic force, were appointed the committee in charge of the room. Vice-President Norman L. Adams was chosen to oversee the work. The girls go to him as a court of last resort on puzzling questions.

BANK SUPPLIES DRINKS.

The lunch room is fitted with nine small white glass-topped round tables, at which four girls may eat at one time. In addition to furnishing the services of a matron—Mrs. E. A. Read—the bank officials supply tea, coffee, cocoa and milk free of charge as a special inducement for the girls to eat there. They also supply a set of dishes and an icechest.

One of the rules of the lunch room is that nothing giving off an odor may be cooked. For this reason the coffee used is in finely powdered form and is prepared in the cup the same as cocoa.

When a girl enters the lunch room she places her lunch box on one of the tables. If she desires tea or coffee with her luncheon she goes to the cabinet and takes out a nonsense nickeled teapot. She then goes to a table and takes enough dry tea to supply her wants.

GAIN TIME FOR SHOPING.

Cans of cocoa and coffee are kept on the same table. On a nearby table the girls are found. Here the girls boil eggs for luncheon and warm cans of soup. Each girl cooks and eats her own food and then washes up the dishes.

Miss Caroline Keith of Lynn, one of the girls who uses the lunch room regularly, said to a Boston American reporter: "Lots in regular restaurants for ten years but I like eating in the lunch room of the bank much better. I figure that my luncheon costs me about 5 cents each and I have much better food than if I ate outside. I know that the food is not wasted as I cook only

"By eating in the bank lunch room we not only get better food and save money, but we have a lot of time at noon time which means a good deal to a working girl. We get a good chance to do our shopping instead of wasting it in a restaurant waiting to be served.

Who's next to join the Bring-Your-Lunch-From-Home Club? Inquiries from both a health and financial standpoint. Ask any girl who carries her lunch.

ASK FOR FUNDS TO SAVE THE BABIES

Since 1916 the Harvard commission has been supplying regular treatment to more than 1,000 children stricken in the epidemic of that year. This after-care has been by public subscription, except for a contribution by Vilde. The classes will begin on September 27 at No. 625 Boylston street.

SHOE FACTORIES FACE SHUTDOWN

Lynn Manufacturers Want Unions to Modify Their Wage Demands

All shoe factories in Lynn, operated by manufacturers who are members of the Lynn Shoe Manufacturers' Association, face a complete shutdown tomorrow unless the wage demands formulated by a number of Lynn unions affiliated with the United Boot Workers of America, are greatly modified or withdrawn before Monday.

While neither the shoe manufacturers nor the union officials have as yet confirmed the report regarding the shutdown it is generally accepted in labor circles as being well founded.

A deadlock now exists between the manufacturers and operatives on the question of the wage increase. The present working agreement expires Monday. A new agreement has been accepted by both sides but has not been signed because of the wage demands. The manufacturers say that they cannot and will not increase the price lists.

Officials of the United Shoe Workers are making efforts to have the factions in two locals abandon the efforts to secure the increase.

COX PROMISES TO BAR JAPANESE

San Francisco, Sept. 18.—"Genuine co-operation" of the Federal government with the State of California in working out a plan for a prohibition against land holding by Japanese and other Orientals if he is elected, was pledged by Governor Cox, Democratic nominee for President in a speech here.

"There is nothing evasive about this," Governor Cox declared, after stating his position on the Japanese question. "It constitutes a flat offer of co-operation in any decent settlement of this question."

The Democratic nominee vigorously attacked the recent pronouncement of Senator Harding, his Republican opponent on the Japanese question "as a complete reversal" of position after a conference with Governor Stephens, who headed the California delegation that visited the Republican candidate's "front porch" at Marion to hear his views.

BOMB MAKERS ARE SOUGHT

Chief Flynn Takes Full Charge of Wall Street Explosion Probe

the result of a time bomb, and has a definite theory as to the manner in which the crime was perpetrated.

DROPPED FIVE CIRCULARS.

He announced today that within a few minutes of the explosion five threatening circulars, signed "American Anarchist Fighters," were dropped into a mail box at Cedar street and Broadway by the bomb setters.

These circulars read:

"Remember, we will not tolerate any longer. Free political prisoners or we will be sure death for all of you."

The plotters undoubtedly dropped these circulars as they were walking hurriedly from the scene of their crime, but after they had abandoned the horse and "death wagon" in which they transported the huge time bomb.

Chief Flynn also announced for the first time that a warning similar to that sent to the French High Commissioner some days ago was received by Morgan & Co., the day before the disaster. It bore a Buffalo postmark. The warning read:

"Stay away from Wall Street between 2 and 2 o'clock tomorrow."

The Department of Justice secret service bureau has talked with many of the fifty-eight injured who still were in hospitals today. He stated none of them had seen a driver in the "death wagon."

The death roll today was thirty-six. Several of those in hospitals, however, were in a critical condition. Two more injured, including those being treated at home, number close to 200.

GUARDS ARE INCREASED.

Guards were increased instead of decreased in the financial district today. The homes of wealthy citizens were also under guard. Wall street swarmed with police and Department of Justice men. Special surveillance was being exercised at the Standard Oil plant in Bayonne, N. J.

The American Legion today joined the organizations raising money to reward arrest of any of the perpetrators of the bomb explosion. Eight of the men killed were overseas veterans.

The "American Anarchist Fighters" are said to be members of an organization which fomented the bomb plotting orgy of 1919, 1918. They are believed to be terrorists of the most extreme kind.

It was also learned it was this same organization that signed the revolutionary circulars wrapped around the bomb sent out in the mails to some of the country on June 2, 1919, when the bomb explosion in Boston ripped the home of the Boston Wide Awake.

An additional clew, though less definite, was seen by the investigators in the mystery amid the wreckage of three battered trucks, one bearing traces of gasoline and kerosene. Theory that the bomb was manufactured by the supposed plotters to hurl flames at all directions when blasted by the explosion.

Ghastly burns on some of the victims of the disaster tend to bear out this theory.

A DELIBERATE PLOT.

Most promising in the hunt for the slayers of the disaster and its instigators—for all investigators now agree that it was deliberately planned by the pair of new shoes put, it is believed, within forty-eight hours of the tragedy on the horse that drew the "mystery wagon" and whose disembowelled carcass was found midway between the United States Assay Office and the Morgan Building, with all evidences that it had suffered immediate and almost terrific impact of the explosion.

Upon these shoes are found the letters "H. S. I. U." which stand for the Horse Shoers International Union.

New York police today had this organization and its 500 members raised to the highest subject of most thorough inquiry, investigating agents visiting every shop and factory where horses are shod in New York.

A report that gained currency to the effect that the owner of the horse and "mystery wagon" was known to the police was denied today, but officials are strongly hopeful of tracing the owner.

Attorney-General Palmer made clear his belief today that all present indications favor those of a criminal conspiracy.

Incidentally, he seized the occasion to explore the $750,000 cut in the appropriation for his department, as recommended by the senate, and his agents were not so well informed on the "insits" of the extremist organizations in this country as they were six months ago. Chief Flynn declared he believed that the explosion was not aimed directly at Morgan & Co., but as a demonstration against the heart of the financial district.

FISCHER CLEW FADES.

Interest in Edward Fischer, former New York banker now in the insane asylum in Canada, upon whom the investigators focussed their attention Sunday, as a possible clew, appeared over night. Chief Flynn said:

"I do not attach importance to Fischer's arrest. I believe he is a 'nut' who happened to hit it off right. The matter, of course, be investigated," Flynn said.

"Fischer is the man who sent a mysterious letter to the impending Wall street disaster to the French high commissioner. The authorities now believe his "premonition" was merely a coincidence.

Dodging the horseshoes, the "mysterious wagon," as reconstructed from its debris, is looked upon by the authorities as the most important clew. Every one of the hundred odd places in New York where horseshoes of its kind can be rented was visited by agents today and the owners were put under examination in an effort to trace the driver.

Deducing his conclusions from the discovery of the warning circular of the "American Anarchist Fighters," Chief Flynn outlined his theory today as follows:

"The plotters probably left the wagon with the horse attached in Wall street, having set the timing device a few minutes ahead. They didn't want to take a chance of mailing the circulars, nor did they want to throw them into the street. They just dropped them, without postage or wrapper, in the nearby mail box, on their way from the scene of the crime. Three minutes later their bomb had exploded."

REWARDS TOTAL $30,500.

The total rewards offered for information leading to the solution of the explosion mystery was raised to $20,500 today when an accident insurance firm added $10,000. The city has offered $10,000 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the plotters and $500 for information resulting in the identification of the owner of the "mystery wagon."

INDICT LAWYER IN DIVORCE CASE

William E. Clapp Charged With Fraud; Malden Divorcee Accused of Perjury

Lawrence, Sept. 18.—Among the list of indictments returned here by the Essex County Grand Jury was one against William E. Clapp of Danvers, a lawyer with an office in Boston, who is charged with trying to secure a divorce by fraudulent means.

Other indictments in the case were returned against Betty Pickett McIntyre of Malden and Earle C. Marshall of parts unknown, on the charge of conspiracy. A further indictment was returned against the McIntyre woman for perjury.

It is alleged that Clapp filed a divorce petition against Annie Clapp on a statutory charge February 17 of this year. The case was prepared for trial but when District Attorney Donnell learned of certain facts he ordered a continuance. Attorneys Carney and Green of Salem presented facts which caused an investigation.

The Commonwealth charges that Clapp paid Earl G. Marshall to trap his wife. Various trips made frequently to the house and Clapp afterwards married the wife and Marshall in a compromising situation.

Clapp, in this meantime, it is said, became acquainted with Betty Pickett McIntyre of Malden, divorced wife of a Danvers dentist.

Clapp and Miss McIntyre woman, several months ago, were taken to Medford police station on a charge of acting improperly in an automobile. They were released, it is said, on a plea that they were Sunday school teachers in Danvers and if the story got out their reputations would be ruined.

COMPENSATION OF WOUNDED WAR HEROES HEAVILY REDUCED

VETERANS' FAMILIES FACE WANT

Compensation of Mutilated Heroes at Parker Hill Cut 80 Per Cent in Some Cases

Cut by the government they served faithfully during the emergency, a number of World War veterans at United States Public Health Service Hospital No. 56, Parker Hill, today were confronting a new problem of how to provide for themselves or families.

Although these men are undergoing treatment for injuries incurred while in the army or navy and will probably not be discharged from the hospital for some time, their compensation from the War Risk Bureau has been heavily reduced, in some instances as much as 80 per cent.

In spite of a telegram from R. L. Cholmeley Jones, director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, in whose jurisdiction these veterans are now included, to the Boston American, stating that compensation and disability percentages had not been cut and would not be without "physical re-examination, the American learned from interviewing several of the patients at Parker Hill Hospital that this was actually being done.

Two men, each of whom gave a leg on the battlefields of France for their country's cause, will go on the operating table this week to have more of the injured limbs removed. Yet these men have recently been put in a deferred classification for pay by th government.

RED TAPE VICTIMS.

One of these cases would be a ridiculous example of the ways of bureaucracy and "red tape" were it not for the seriousness of it to the veteran himself.

With his right leg gone he was trying to learn a new trade under the vocational training system until May of this year, when he was ordered back to Parker Hill Hospital for further treatment. His has a wife and child as dependents and was receiving $125 a month compensation.

The first of this month a letter came from the War Risk Bureau informing the veter at the allowance had been cut to $50. The reason given was: "Discontinuance of Vocational Training." He is Wendell A. Clough of West Somerville, and was wounded at Chateau Thierry while serving with C Company, 103rd Infantry.

Hibbard L. Henderson of Somerville was invalided home from Camp Meade, Md., last November when one of them dropped over, catching him beneath it. His disability was rated as total for the time being, although he was thought he might recover eventually. His compensation was fixed at $142.50 a month.

Henderson has a wife and four children. He entered the vocational training provided by the government but on August 15 of this year was ordered to Parker Hill Hospital as a bed patient. A few days prior to that he had been sent a letter from the War Risk Bureau stating that his compensation was cut to $10 monthly. The reason given was: "Discontinuance of vocational training and new medical rating."

$58 FOR FAMILY OF FIVE.

September 13 another letter came to Henderson announcing that the government had reconsidered his case and added $15 monthly to his allowance, making a total of $25 for the maintenance of his family of five.

Norman D. MacKay lost his left leg while with the 104th Infantry in the Argonne. His compensation was reduced from $80 to $40 a month on August 22 and the only explanation given was, "new medical rating." He is scheduled to undergo another operation this week.

Joseph Carbonneau of New Bedford, during the war with the 306th Engineers, 81st Division, married and has two children.

Carbonneau was receiving $100 a month until July 21, when it was reduced to $25. He received the customary explanation of the bureau, "new medical rating." He and his wife wrote letters of protest in July. Carbonneau said, but have received no replies. He is suffering from the after effects of pneumonia, due to exposure while in the army and is in the hospital for an indefinite period.

Church Worker Calls Dancing Abnormal

Miss Inez Hall, Boston dancer, with her partner, Lester Young, dancing a graceful social dance. Even such graceful and correct dances as this, Miss Bessie Smith, church worker at Ruggles Street Church, brands as unworthy and unintellectual.

"The modern dance was born in Perdition and leads straight back to its birthplace. The dance, of any sort, is low, immoral, unintellectual and stupid. I cannot see how any intelligent young man or woman would care to dance. I do not see how Christian men and women can stress emphatically enough their agreement with Dr. Stratton of New York in all that he says against dancing."

Miss Bessie Smith, young woman church worker of Ruggles Street Baptist Church, who has traveled to many countries, and kept her eyes open to observe manners and customs and dances of the people where she traveled, is unalterably opposed to the dance of any sort. As she told the American:

"Many a girl, ruined morally and physically and spiritually, traces her downfall right back to the public dance. Many a heart has been broken, many a life has been wrecked, through dancing and through nothing else. Any thinking young man or woman, hesitating whether to dance or not, would be influenced to abstain from dancing forever by just a look into the history of dancing.

"Take the so-called modern steps. They come from Africa, and wild Australia, from any land where savage people, who, by beating of drums, go through immoral antics and stupid. I cannot see how any intelligent young man or woman would care to dance. I do not see how Christian men and women can stress emphatically enough their agreement with Dr. Stratton of New York in all that he says against dancing."

"Now we have altogether too many weak religious people for the dance. We have that class of condoners who say that dancing gives a girl grace. How silly! Grace, safe, wholesome, healthy, is far better to be found in the gymnasium. In addition, muscles are built there, and health reinforced.

"But there are other objections to dancing. It is, first of all, such a silly thing to do. Where is the sense of spending useful hours in whirling about a ballroom floor, when great life is yours for the living, and good deeds, and pleasant deeds, await your doing?

"We hear again so much about normal fun, as applied to young people dancing.

"Dancing, in its monstrosities, in its modern, hideous, exemplifications, is not normal. I call it abnormal. I do not see how anyone can call it anything but this—abnormal."

PICKFORD SUED FOR $30,000

Paris Modistes Charge Olive Thomas Ordered Gowns; Threat to Seize His Effects

Paris, Sept. 18.—Jack Pickford is being sued for $30,000 by five dressmaking houses, which allege the money is due them for gowns and other garments ordered by his wife, Olive Thomas, whose subsequent death from mercurial poisoning was a sensation to the entire world.

The gowns, it is alleged, were ordered by the late Miss Thomas in the week preceding the poisoning. Olive spent many days of her life in the most sumptuous of the dressmaking establishments. She had ordered fifty dresses and two fur coats, one ermine and seal and one of mink. She had had but two fittings and none of the garments had been delivered.

The claimants, however, argue that the orders were definitely given and threatened to seize Pickford's trunks for surety unless he makes payment before he leaves Paris.

CHARGES ADVICE COST $3,700

Lynn Woman Seeking Divorce, Tells Jury of Experience With Fortune Teller

Lawrence, Sept. 18.—Advice, which is most often, free, cost Elizabeth Lampitar of Lynn $3,700, according to evidence which was brought before the grand jury here for consideration in a larceny case against Madame Vastike, reputed fortune teller, and Thomas Stanley, both of Lynn. The woman complainant sought advice regarding how to secure a divorce.

The fortune teller is alleged to have given this advice:

"Draw all the money you have in the bank and sew it in a chamois bag. Carry it about during the day and put it under your pillow at night. Drop some salt in a sealed bottle and place it under pillow at night. Also place a sealed bottle of salt under your bed."

Mrs. Lampitar was said to have hid her back "blessed" during the "ceremony," and it is claimed that the money was taken from the bag in her lap, paper and rags being substituted. She later received an unsigned letter stating that the divorce had been granted. She then opened the bag to find her loss. She did not get the divorce.

Tablet of American's War Heroes Unveiled

A large bronze tablet, called the "Roll of Honor" and memorializing the names of the employes of the Boston American who served in the World War, has been unveiled on the ground floor of the American office.

The tablet is four feet eight inches long and twenty-four inches wide. Below its oval shape, at its head, is the goddess of liberty in an appealing pose, with her hands flanked on the left by a soldier and on the right by a sailor.

The names of 166 men are in alphabetical order in two columns and one row, the first column containing the size of the tablet.

At the top and base of the tablet are the words:

"In honor of the men of the Boston American and Advertiser, who served in the great war that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom and that government of the people, by the people and for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

LOWER PRICES PREDICTED

Department of Labor Officials Say Cost of Staples Will Drop to Early-War Levels

Washington, Sept. 18.—The peak of high prices was reached about the middle of last July and since that time the cost of most staple commodities has declined steadily, according to officials of the Department of Labor. Important among the reductions are those in the wholesale and retail prices of food stuffs, meat and clothing which average to date approximately 4 per cent.

It was confidently predicted that during the coming six months prices will fall to lower levels than have been known since early in the war. The clothing business especially, it said, to be facing a slump.

Hugh Kerwin, conciliator of the department of labor, stated today that the anthracite strike is practically a closed issue. Most of the miners have returned to work, according to Kerwin, and the rest cannot remain out much longer. With the temporary shortage of anthracite coal is expected to result, the price, it was stated, will not be increased, and it is hoped that the shortage will be made good before winter sets in.

MORE PONZI MEN INDICTED

Essex County Grand Jury Returns Bills Against Lawrence "Get-Rich-Quick" Agents

Lawrence, Sept. 18.—Indictments were returned here in the Ponzi case by the Essex County Grand Jury.

Peter Lamb, highest paid Ponzi agent, who had charge of the Lawrence office which took in a million and a half, was indicted in sixteen counts of larceny.

His assistant, Christian Rheim, was indicted in four counts of larceny. The indictments are the result of a lengthy probe into the affairs of the office here. About 1,000 persons gave testimony in the cases.

No warrants were taken out against either men. They were allowed to go on their own recognizance for appearance in the Superior Criminal Court here.

Frederick J. McGraw and Napoleon Dumas, both of this city, and James Cassani of Chelsea, agents for the Colony Foreign Exchange Co., were indicted, their cases coming up from the lower court. They are charged with larceny in misappropriating the affairs of the company to "investors."

These cases will be among the first tried in the coming session of the court, according to District Attorney Donnell of Peabody, who directed the probe.

STATE CAN TRY RUM SELLERS

Supreme Court Finds Local Liquor Laws Do Not Conflict With Volstead Act

The full bench of the Supreme Court has decided that the Massachusetts laws relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors are not in conflict with the Volstead Act, or the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The case came before the Supreme Court on a report made by Judge Dubuque in the case of Florence Nickerson, who was found guilty of the illegal sale of liquor. It was contended on her behalf that the Massachusetts laws became inoperative when the amendment to the Federal Constitution went into effect, and that only the United States courts had jurisdiction of liquor prosecutions.

About one hundred similar cases are pending in the Superior Criminal Court, and now that the Supreme Court says that the verdict in the Nickerson case is to stand, these cases will have to be tried.

The opinion of the court, which was written by Chief Justice Rugg, covers thirty-four pages of typewritten copy. The three points the court was unanimous, but on others a minority differed with the majority, but did not submit a dissenting opinion.

The minority believes that chapter 100 of the revised laws, under which the complaint against the Nickerson woman was made, cannot longer be enforced until legislation has been obtained to conform to the Volstead Act, and the eighteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States.

She was a school teacher at the Sarah Greenwood School. Mr. Hurley is a graduate of Boston College and is now in the Harvard Law School. He served in the war, going overseas as a private and returning a lieutenant.

Haverhill, Sept. 18.—Workmen employed in excavating under a cement floor of the machine shop at the Penichuck Mills found the skull of a man. NEW YORK'S HOPES OF WORLD'S SERIES CORNER FAST FADING

YANKEES SLUMP IN PINCHES

White Sox Show Old Fighting Form—Dodgers Increase Their Lead

New York, Sept. 18.—New York's dream of a metropolitan world's series was at the backdoor today ready to be ushered out if the Yankees take one more pasting in Chicago.

Today they are only a game ahead of the White Sox, and the Indians, again leading the league, have pulled out a full game and a half to the good.

As a matter of cold facts, the Yanks cannot afford to lose even one more ball game if they want to win a pennant. They may expect Cleveland to win practically all its ball games from now on and the Sox do the same.

One of the two of these clubs is going to take the short end when they meet in Cleveland, and each club has a longer schedule to finish out than the Yankees have.

Therefore the Yankees to win must pile up a lead and trust to good fortune, something they are not well acquainted with.

On the other hand, the Brooklyn club is gradually drawing out from the pursuing pack. Another defeat administered to the Cincinnati Reds shoved the world's champions into third place, and gave the Dodgers another half a game to the good.

That the Giants cannot catch them now is practically admitted, but the teams are scheduled to battle each other at the end of the season, which may make a lot of difference.

ENGLISH HIGH BOYS STAND UP UNDER HARD PRACTICE

After one week of drilling which included formation practice and setting up exercises English High football candidates today showed the fruits of their hard work, as stacked up under the hardest practices of the year.

Coach Murray has four veterans of last year's team, in Lyons, Martin, Shear and Bridge, among the seventy-five candidates reporting to date.

Only a few days separate English from the annual game with Dorchester High and from all outward appearances the players are now in condition to compete with any opponent.

Double-Header With Braves for Farewell of the Season

By NICK FLATLEY

The St. Louis Cardinals played two more games with the Braves today at the emptiest ball yard in the far-flung circuit, and then called it a season in Boston. The Clubs come next, and then the western invasion of the National League will be ended. So, too, will the Brave home season, except for a few double headers with the Phils at the fag end of the campaign, two weeks hence.

Almost anything is likely to happen in baseball these days—reversion to three of rat scores and the like of that. Consider three recent title in which were witnessed the Cards ripping off eight runs in one round; the Sox and Tigers playing 14-17, and the Browns thumping out 17 runs.

A. L. Flag Struggle Only Thrill Left

Only the wild struggle between the three leaders in the American League keeps baseball interest alive, now that the Dodgers have practically sewed up the National League struggle. There's nothing particularly at stake for our native Braves just now, except to see what some of the youngsters can do.

Lou Townsend, who has shown a lot of left-handed pitching stuff in three relief excursions was booked to start one of the twin games today. Leo looks like an experienced pitcher and if he can be as mysterious for a protracted stretch as he has been unaccountable, he can attain quite a few victories before the ultimate ball rings.

SPORT EDITORIAL

The Spirit of Fairness.

American sport audiences are considered the quintessence of fairness.

Right down from the bottom of their hearts, individually or collectively, comes the two words that speak volumes for America's spirit of sportsmanship, "fair play."

If a man, or team, commits an act which deserves a sound panning, that particular variety of "razzberry" will be forthcoming as quickly as the spectators recognize the deed. And they are quick to see things. They grasp a situation instantaneously.

If, on the other hand, a man, or team, performs in meritorious style, the fans are just as quick to give him, or it, a generous share of their inexhaustive supply of appreciation.

They are also quick to determine the difference between an error that could not be helped and an outrageous offence against the basic principles of fair play.

It is a motley collection—a sport audience—made up of every manner of humanity and possessing one big heart.

Out of that heart it pours its good freely, also its gall. Fair play alone wins its favor.

You, and you may be a sport fan, do you live up to the quality of fairness you appreciate in sports?

Are you giving the next fellow a square deal? And your own folks at home, how about them? You believe in fairness drawn to a fine point, but do you practice what you preach?

Be fair with yourself and you can't help being fair with others.

Selfishness is the greatest offence against fairness.

BOOB BASEBALL RED SOX BEST

Tigers and Boston Teams Have Regular Burlesque Game—27 Runs in Contest

Detroit, Sept. 18.—Boston and Detroit struggled through twelve ludicrous innings before the Tigers were able to establish a claim to the game. The count was 14 to 13.

No backlot ball clubs ever played more poorly than the Sox and Bengals, and fans were forced to laugh at the funny way they did things. In fact, it was so amateurish at times that spectators nearly rolled off their seats. It took three hours and twenty-seven minutes to complete play.

Thirty-three players took part in the melee, which was resultant of twenty-seven runs, twenty-eight hits for a total of thirty-nine bases, and twenty-eight bases on balls. Seven Detroit hurlers, five of them, issued twenty passes, half of which are charged to John Bogart, making his debut. But the Sox couldn't hit with runners on sufficiently to hang up enough runs to win.

SOCCER GOING ON HIGH HERE

Many Games Slated in New England Each Week—Local Teams Under Way

Soccer football is fast becoming popular in the United States. Reports from the chief soccer centres throughout the country indicate that the 1920-21 season just started upon will be a banner one for the sport.

The game in New England is very popular, particularly in the big ball districts.

The game in this section was given a big boost last year by the Fore River club of Quincy playing its way into the national championship final, only to be defeated by a fast St. Louis eleven in the final game.

The industrial league in Lawrence, comprising teams in Lynn, Beverly, Lowell, Manchester, N. H., and Andover promises to revive interest in the game throughout that wide section.

Boston is considered one of the hotbeds for the sport, and there are many good games played here every week.

Charlestown, Roxbury, Boston Cambridge, Brockton and Lynn are all represented in the local league.

Games can be seen this afternoon at Sullivan square, Fore River Field, Quincy, Merrimount Park, Quincy, and Cooper street, West Lynn.

ORIOLES WIN FLAG AND TWENTY-THIRD STRAIGHT

By defeating Reading, the Baltimore club of the International League today clinched the pennant in that circuit. It also set the number of its consecutive victories at twenty-three. It was necessary for the winners to score seven runs in the final inning, but they did it.

TO PLAY INTERNATIONAL POLO MATCH NEXT JUNE

New York, Sept. 18.—The dates for the International polo match next year between America and Great Britain have been set for June 18, 22 and 25, according to an announcement made recently in London by English polo officials. The American Polo Association has agreed to the dates.

Tendler-Callahan Fit for Big Battle

By JACK CONWAY.

Lew Tendler and Frankie Callahan are fit and waiting for the sound of the bell which will send them into action in a ten-round bout at Johnny Cuddy's open-air arena at Lawrence this afternoon. The tussle is for the 133-pound championship of the world and has attracted the interest of boxing fans in all parts of the country.

Tendler and Callahan are recognized as the world's greatest featherweights at 123 pounds. They have eliminated all rivals by their terrific punching ability.

Both men have established themselves as knockout punchers of the first degree. Tendler's left has shattered the hopes of many aspirants for ring honors, while Callahan's heavy hitting with his right has caused much destruction in the ranks of our noble lightweights.

Winner in Line for Bout With Leonard

The winner of this afternoon's battle will be in line for a match with Benny Leonard. That worthy has finally awakened to the realization of the fact that he can't be meeting setups forever. He must come out in the open and battle legitimate challengers.

Callahan and Tendler both can make 133 pounds. Leonard on the other hand, will not make lower than 135 pounds, two pounds more than this. This would mean that he would enter the ring scaling close to 140 pounds.

Johnny Cuddy has arranged a strong preliminary card for his show today. Kid Thomas vs. Barney Burke, both of Lawrence, were down to meet in one eight-round bout. Mike Castle, of Lawrence and Jack Leary of this city were billed to clash in another eight-session affair, while Buddy Dolan of Lawrence and Young Jack Britton are down to swap blows in a six-round frolic.

The Commonwealth A. A. will be on the job with a bang-up attraction tonight. The feature bout of ten-rounds will find Danny Krammer of the West End swapping blows with Johnny Russell of New York. When this pair clashed at Portland a couple of weeks ago, honors were fifty-fifty after twelve spirited seconds of milling. Krammer now wants to keep Russell. Inasmuch as the latter has made things mighty interesting for Bobby Dyson and Max Williams in tussles at Mechanics, it looks as though the local youth is liable to receive a surprise. There will also be two sights as Larry Costello of Charlestown will oppose Young Gould of Brockton, while Bert Jones of Revere and Mack Murphy of Atlantic will renew hostilities.

PROGRAM AT LAWRENCE.

Buddy Dolan, Lawrence, vs. Young Jack Britton, Lynn, six rounds.

Mike Castle, Lawrence, vs. Jack Leary, Boston, eight rounds.

Kid Thomas, Lawrence, vs. Barney Burke, Lawrence, eight rounds.

Lew Tendler, Philadelphia, vs. Frankie Callahan, North Reading, ten rounds. (Jack Conway picks Tendler to win).

'Oracle' Is All Wrong in Olympiad Story

By CHARLES E. PARKER

The "oracle" has spoken.

Burton Whitman, our esteemed contemporary and fellow-observer of the conditions imposed upon our Olympic athletes and the handling of their participation in the Antwerp Olympiad, has trotted out an overflowing bucket of kalsomine and a nice thick brush, and is slopping the lily-white fluid all over things connected with the recent Olympic meet.

Contrary to the statements made by many of the athletes who were fully as close to the situation and possibly more observing, the "oracle" accords unstinted praise to Head Coach Mohler and to the demure Bob Weaver and styles as "hammer throwers of the press," the newspapermen who have told of the above conditions or who have quoted athletes in their complaints, very adroitly classing the Olympic newspaper correspondents with the sponsor of a fake story concerning Jake Driscoll, which appeared only in the afternoon edition of Whitman's paper.

The "oracle" lays particular stress on what a lovely time was had by all after the athletes were sent here over, and when, as he puts it, "the wild members of the original Olympic team had sailed home.

Coming and Going Two Different Trips

Now "oracle" to Paris and London, where these athletes who could spare the time competed fairly successfully against foreign performers who already had broken training, and opportunity later for said athletes to come back "like princes of the blood, traveling first class on the Olympic," may be all very well, but the purpose of sending the team to Europe was to make the best possible showing in the Olympic games, and this would have been better assured if the money spent to sending them home first class had been utilized in sending them to Antwerp first class.

The "oracle" admits that Head Coach Mohler allowed the American Olympic committee to usurp his job, but he fails to explain why Mohler allowed this.

Mike Murphy, so far as can be learned, became the head coach once he was named for the position and acted as head coach from that time on.

How Bob Weaver Did Some Fixing"

In boosting Bob Weaver of the Amateur Athletic Union committee for the presidency of the A. A. U., the "oracle" styles him as a "fixer from away back." These words followed his doings at Antwerp and gained the opinion that Weaver had "fixed" his team for Schiller and Jake Driscoll on the list of men who started the 400-metre dash," and had "fixed" his man Schiller to win in the place of George Dandrow on the list of weight-putting hammer throwers, and had been responsible for the selection of his man Hunter on the 2,000-metre steeplechase. Probably you will agree with the "oracle" in the latter's description, but not in his praise of the A. A. U. presidential candidate.

According to one man prominently and officially connected with the Olympic track and field team, Bob Weaver made the announcement that he would be running things before the team got to Antwerp.

In the opinion of the assistant coaches and many of the athletes, Weaver realized his ambition. Just how the affair was run already has been made known.

HALSELL WINS IN SENIOR GOLF

Dallas Player Goes Around Apawamis Course in Eighty Strokes

By ROBERT E. HARLOW.

That most remarkable sporting event, the Seniors' golf championship, is being held at the Apawamis Golf Club in the Metropolitan district, and as usual the event is proving that golf is one of the best fountains of youth that can be found.

The Seniors' championship is limited to golfers who have attained an age of 55 years and beyond and the scores returned by these veterans of the links indicates that the healthful outdoor exercise obtained by tramping over many fairways, has kept them in fine physical condition.

One of the most remarkable veterans who plays in the Senior events is George Wright of Wollaston. Mr. Wright is in the class for golfers of 70 years and over and he went around the Apawamis links in 94 strokes. Apawamis is a real test, for the Metropolitan championship was played there.

Score Would Be Credit to Any Golfer

The score which won the division for golfers of from fifty-five to fifty-nine years of age would do credit to any golfer, for it was an eighty, and was accomplished by Hugh Halsell of Dallas, Texas, who travelled all the way to New York to display a round of youthful golf at Apawamis. W. E. Truesdell of Garden City led the golfers in the class for men from sixty to sixty-four years of age with a ninety-one, or just one worse than an average of fives. Mr. Truesdell is a fine player, and very often he gives younger men bad beatings in the tournaments at Pinehurst, where he spends his winters, and in the metropolitan district in the summer season.

Cyril Tolley, the British amateur golf champion, is better acquainted with American turf than he was at the Engineers' Club. In an invitation tournament at the Morris County Country Club he finished second in a field of seventy-one in the qualifying round, with a score of seventy-nine. Bobby Jones, that surprising Atlanta lad, led with a seventy-four. Roger Wethered, England, qualified in the first eight with a score of eighty-two.

Somerville Is After 1920 Grid Title

Somerville's prospects of another championship in the Suburban League appear much brighter than that of any other team that has answered the call of the pigskin. Coach Sylvio McLoughlin is mighty fortunate in having six of last year's team report to him.

Jack Lynch, Capt. Lynch, Capt. Gilky, Bob McPhail, Dan Kelliher and Bob Buckley are the veterans of last year's line-up. In addition to these men, McKelvey, Kniff, Falvey, Cameron, Caldarone and Lynch are prospects that look mighty good. And Coach McLoughlin will soon have these men working in the regular line-up.

The manner in which the boys went through their workout today indicates that within a short time they will be in championship form.

With the exception of the line is practically made up. This can also be said of the back field. The way in which the new material went through the stiff drill also indicates that the veterans will have to hustle to hold their old berths.

The annual Waltham-Somerville game is still hanging fire. It is hoped the officials will get together and settle their differences in order that this game will not go by the board.

The schedule that Somerville has arranged for the coming season follows:

Oct. 12—Cambridge Latin at Somerville.
Oct. 16—Everett at Everett.
Oct. 23—Somerville at Newton.
Oct. 30—Malden at Somerville.
Nov. 6—Somerville at Medford.
Nov. 13—Somerville at Medford.
Nov. 20—Open date.
Nov. 25—Rindge at Somerville.

In addition to this schedule, Coach McLoughlin has hopes of arranging practice games with Tech Freshman, Tech Soph and Beverly High.

IRELAND UNDER SUPPRESSION

British Coercion Powerless to Secure Peace in Ireland, Declares Miss Thompson in Concluding Article

By DOROTHY THOMPSON.
Written for the Boston American.

London, Sept. 18.—I went to Ireland on the day that the King signed the Hamar-Greenwood bill "for the restoration of order in Ireland," and I was there during the first ten days of the application of martial law and increased "coercion."

I am not a political expert, and in the foregoing articles I have refrained from an expression of political opinion, but no one could live in Ireland just now without seeing certain facts standing out so boldly that he who runs may read.

One of these facts is that under the cumulatively coercive policy of the British government there has been throughout Ireland a distinct swing to the left. Men who yesterday advocated some form of home rule as a solution of the Irish question have now joined the republicans. Men who yesterday were Unionists are now favoring complete dominion status for Ireland.

UNIONISTS SHIFTING.

This is even observable in Ulster. The Unionist solidarity of Ulster is certainly being undermined. Only six of the nine counties of the Ulster province are now in the Unionist complex and of those two would almost certainly go Nationalist under county option. In the centre of Unionism, Belfast, the Socialist vote has been growing with amazing rapidity and since the Unionist forces in Ulster have in many ways shown themselves to be allied with anti-labor forces, the rising influence of labor is a rising toward Nationalism as well.

Moreover, the pogroms against the Catholics have gone so far that Unionist business men are beginning to see how suicidal the civil war is. The damage to property in Ulster now totals a million pounds, and will mean an enormous increase on the tax rates under the present compensation laws. The boycotts instituted first by the trade unions and then by Sinn Fein against Belfast industries have had their effect in driving home to certain business men at least the fact that Ireland is economically one country.

Bitter opposition to the policy of the British Government is by no means confined to republicans. In fact, they are perhaps the only group which profits by it at all, since it confirms their propaganda that there is no hope to be had in looking toward England. The attitude of George Russell ("A. E.") is significant. One of Ireland's greatest artists; a poet, a painter and essayist, out of an amazing vitality he has found time to ally himself with the agricultural co-operative movement and has become its centre and spirit.

He is not a politician. To him politics is so much peep on the surface of things. From him one could look for a sane and dispassionate point of view. But from no one whom I met in Ireland did I hear a more scathing indictment of the present British policy.

AGAINST IRISH PEOPLE.

"The war of Great Britain is not against Sinn Fein," he said. "It is a war against the Irish people, and against those very forces in Ireland which offer the only hope for moderation and peace.

"The very men who are making a last heroic effort to save Ireland from a war of conquest—something too horrible to contemplate—look toward Westminster with eyes in which hope is darkened with an inevitable cynicism. These men—Sir Horace Plunkett, Sir Stanley Harrington, Lord McConnell (a former under-secretary) and Lord Shaftesbury (an Ulsterman) believe that even in this dark moment dominion home rule offered to Ireland might bring North and South together in peace.

"But they know that it can be no tentative offer. The present attitude of the British government, which is to apply coercion, and at the same time refuse to take any conciliatory step until the moderate group can prove that it has a united public opinion behind them in Ireland, is hopeless for peace. Because the present attitude of Irishmen grows out of the policy of England, and nothing can change their attitude except a change of that policy. No one in Ireland, I think, believes that an "offer" from England would make a particle of difference in Ireland. An offer accompanied by the withdrawal of troops, the calling of a constituent assembly, a cessation of the old policy of molly-coddling Ulster and a recognition of Ireland as a nation might keep the country within the empire without war. It is certain that Sinn Fein has adherents whose support is more of a protest against the present state of affairs than an evidence of fundamental republicism. And no one doubts the patriotism of Sinn Fein, and even among its warmest supporters there must be those who would hesitate to plunge the country into war for an end more or less chimerical. At present they have an irrefutable case.

During the time that I was in Ireland the movement for peace under dominion home rule got under way. It was rumored that there would be a statement from Bonar Law or Lloyd George before the adjournment of Parliament. I remember how breathlessly we waited for a statement, feeling sure that it would embody some hope for the cessation of war and the return of reason. Only Sinn Fein expressed no hope, its utterance smiling at what they chose to call our gullibility.

The statement was only a reiteration of the policy which is driving Ireland to destruction. Only Sinn Fein, being completely cynical, was not disappointed.

The following week was the bloodiest and the most destructive of property in the history of many awful months.

WARNS AGAINST PARIS DENS

Film Beauty Says Wine and Wickedness Are Ensnaring Gay Tourists

(This is the third instalment of an authentic expose of the wild Paris night life, the indulgence in which is assigned as contributing to the tragic death of Olive Thomas, the beautiful American moving picture actress who swallowed poison after a party in the Montmartre.

By C. F. BERTELLI,
Universal Service Staff Correspondent.

Paris, Sept. 18.—The Parisian night clubs, of the kind that cater especially to the patronage of rich American men and young American girls, are scattered over Paris.

The police are overworked raiding them, but seem unable to cope with the situation. The clubs are reopened as fast as they are closed, and, profiting by the advertisement of the raid, proceed to a new and greater profit, and, if possible, greater excesses.

One of these places, just outside the city gates, is practically run by Americans, and is patronized by practically no other nationality. It is for members only. One becomes a member by giving the doorkeeper $40.

WINE FLOWS FREELY.

The champagne flows freely. The place always reeks with the odor of cigarettes that hang from the lips of every habitue. Anybody dances with anybody. None bother with the formality of introductions. The tango, as danced by the wild Argentine Vaqueros of the Pampas, is the feature of the establishment.

Young girls are always sure to find men ready to teach them its most intricate and most ardent steps. Toward dawn the dilapidated crowd sneaks off to the hotels, accompanied by the dregs of true Parisians, who, through seeing such performances, come to dislike the rich Americans.

Lois Meredith of New York, at present the most featured of the dozen actresses here and who is described by Tristan Bernard, author of "The Little Cafe," as the "nicest girl who has ever played my plays," in talking of her experience and observations, said:

"It is difficult to explain the extraordinary feeling of the French people toward the Americans, but unquestionably the frequent criticism of American women is due to the imprudence and levity they display while visiting Paris.

WOMEN YIELD TO PARIS LURE.

"It is not so much the French surroundings but the idea of Paris that so many American women have.

"One must be really wise to the danger of Paris to escape its lure. Wine flows freely, and because it does not taste as strong as the whiskey and the gin that were drunk in the United States before prohibition, the American women think that they can drink it with impunity.

"Nothing less than a most extraordinarily sumptuous opium den, such as one might dream of after reading 'Arabian Nights,' brought me back to the reality of life after my arrival here two years ago.

"After a gay supper, at which we danced, the party went by automobiles to a magnificent house in the rich residential quarter. First we drove through the beautiful surrounding garden.

"Once I stepped into the house I saw, not the ordinary drawing room, but a luxurious opium den. There was a thick cloud of smoke, strongly scented. Women and men, attired in rich Mandarin robes in the richly-colored carpets.

"Others were working at the little trays preparing the pipes which the men and women smoked. The strong smell got me by the throat. I very nearly fainted. I rushed outdoors and hurried home. The next day Sarah Bernhardt, who is my guardian, told me that I had seen an opium den. I couldn't tell her where it was.

When I was a boy in short trousers my father took me to the Tremont Theatre to see "Way Down East," which W. A. Brady had just produced and brought to Boston. That was twenty-two years ago. The darn thing has been running ever since. Phoebe Davis, who was a beautiful young woman that night at the Tremont, grew old in the part and finally died; but the piece went on forever.

And a year or so ago Brady sold the motion picture right to D. W. Griffith for $175,000, which proves that the Hebrews have nothing on the Irish when it comes to getting the coin.

When all was said and done, "Way Down East" was a slick melodrama, and when I saw it a dozen years after the first experience I could pick it full of holes. Nevertheless there was a wonderful heart interest in the piece, crudely developed as it was, and I am told that the genius of Griffith has turned it into one of the most enthralling stories ever set in the films.

Let nobody believe that it was the spectacular feature of "Birth of a Nation" which made that the classic of the films. It was the wonderfully human story which ran through it, and the pitiful little tragedy of the "little girl." Those who have seen "Way Down East" tell me that Griffith has turned an old-fashioned melodrama into a masterpiece.

"The Broken Wing."

Alphonse Ethier, who plays a very prominent role in "The Broken Wing," the drama which alights at the Park Square next Monday night, had the distinction of succeeding Lionel Barrymore, when that great actor left the cast of "The Jest" in New York last season.

"The Broken Wing" is a brand new play by Paul Dickey and Charles Goddard, and the producer is none other than Sargent Aborn, one of the two brothers who used to do grand opera at a dollar top in half a dozen cities simultaneously a few years ago. I believe it is Aborn's first venture as a dramatic producer.

The scene of the play is laid in Mexico and it abounds in bandits, American aviators and beauteous senoritas.

More Potash.

The Hebrew of the stage was confined exclusively to burlesque until the first "Potash and Perlmutter" comedy proved that American audiences were willing to take him more or less seriously while the Jews themselves enjoyed the caricaturicies of one of their race on the stage.

There is no parallel that I remember to the quarrel of Potash plays, the latest of which, with Barney Bernard in the title role comes to the Plymouth Monday. Their popularity has been unbounded. Had it rested upon the Jewish people alone four successive hits on the same subject would be impossible but all classes, races and religions can appreciate Abe Potash.

Abie Here, Too.

There is another Hebrew character who enjoys a great following, and that is "Abie the Agent," one of the vicissitudes have amused the readers of this newspaper for several years. "Abie" has gone upon the stage, and his first Metropolitan appearance will be at the Arlington next week Monday. Thus we have two Hebrew comedies appearing at once in our midst. What chance have the other shows?

Taking Hitchen Out of Hitchy-Koo.

When "Hitchy-Koo 1920" opened in Boston a fortnight ago it had never been performed anywhere. The ordinary "try it on Fido" process was impossible with such a big production. Hence, it opened with the usual line of play doctors, stage directors, producers and authors present in the first night audience, checking up the laughs, counting the yawns and timing the applause. One of the weak features which bored me that night and I mentioned them in my review, by the way, I did not like them either.

Every night since something has been added or something taken away until those who were there the opening night would be astonished to find how different the show is now.

That, however, is the process of every big musical production. The Follies which is now on here in Tremont is simply in a process of transition and it isn't for two or three weeks that it gets going smoothly and becomes a great show. By the time such pieces get to Boston they are running like machinery, and that is why we are surprised to catch a production like "Hitchy-Koo" in the making. I predict that "Hitchy-Koo," with its three stars, will be a riot in New York.

By the way Julia Sanderson has revealed gifts as a comedienne that nobody suspected her of having, and her work in the "Buggy Ride" number is one of the high spots of the show.

Bitten If When Dad Tumbles.

Betty Kent, the two-year-old daughter of Billy Kent, manager of "Pitter Patter," saw her parent act at the Globe the other night. She has submitted the following signed statement regarding her impressions:

By BETTY KENT.

I fink my daddy is the best fing in the show, and I liked him best when he fahed down stairs. I laughed and loud they took me out of the high box and put me in the front row.

Miss Richardson is so funny when she gets wet, but my daddy says that if little girls started fings to get wet they might meet a nice fellow to marry.

I suspect the real author of the above baby talk is a 200-pound press agent named Al Strassman.

Scoops for Plays.

Carl Mason, a member of Mr. Hearst's International Magazine staff in New York, tells in a concise way how to dramatize a novel. He says: First catch your novel. Then interview theatrical managers who are looking for plays for an assortment of stars. If the writer of the novel has not provided a bedroom scene—write one into the drama. Throw away all of the author's original dialogue, and substitute modern up-to-date jazz slang.

Make the hero of the narrative any old kind of a man, to conform to the star the Broadway manager wishes to fit with a piece. If there is a spot where the action slows up, put in a specialty; an acrobatic novelty, song and dance, or high dive. It really makes no difference.

Arrange the play so that the acts can be shuffled and played in any sequence desired provided, however, that there is a climax which will pull at least a dozen curtain calls (all carefully rehearsed with the chef de claque, the ushers, and visiting press agents).

Then, after the first performance, the author should permit himself to be shammed in a corner, while a professional play-doctor manhandles his pet offspring and reduces it to a nameless freak.

Fortunately for Carl Mason, Walker Whiteside's methods do not conform to Broadway ideas. His ways are constructive, and as a result "The Master of Ballantrae" grew amazingly at every rehearsal. In its present shape, as shown at the Hollis Street Theatre, Mr. Mason has every reason to be proud of the child of his brain.

A Sporting Chink.

Next to Fay Bainter, the hit of "East Is West" is George Nash as Charlie Yang. Charlie is one of the most picturesque characters ever placed upon the American stage. He is a "sporting chink," a semi-Americanized Chinaman, who plays the races, wears noisy clothes and has assimilate the worst traits of the Americans he has met.

George Nash is a veteran actor, who has created many characters during his long career, which began with Joe Jefferson in "Rip Van Winkle." It was Jefferson's kindly aid and suggestions which gave Nash his first success in character work.

Among the recent plays in which his work is remembered were "The Witching Hour," "The Harvest Moon," "The Miracle Man" and "Officer 666."

Free to Move.

Although "Irene" is enjoying land office business, they have stuck up the red flag of moving day at the Wilbur and the lively musical comedy has entered its last month. "Mary" was whisked out of Boston before everybody had a chance to meet her, and now this other nice girl is going away too soon.

Grabbed It Quick.

When it comes to "working fast," ought to hand it to Clyde E. MacArdle, the youthful and ambitious manager of the Somerville Players. Just to prove to his large host of patrons that he is forever aiming to give them the latest and best of established successes MacArdle completed arrangements yesterday with Joseph Kiser for the first stock presentation in America of the latter's successful three comedy, "Mrs. Jimmie Thompson," which closes its Boston engagement tonight. The piece will be shown in Somerville for the next important entries with Miss Bronaugh and Mr. Carroll assigned to the leading roles. MacArdle is a young man whose place is in a large city.

One on Kelly.

Lew Kelly who comes to Waldron's Casino for the head of "The Lew Kelly Show," is said to get tired of retelling an incident that happened in Cincinnati. It's a big one. It was staged at the Grand Opera House. Kelly was on the bill, his act coming near the end so as to give him a chance to complete his show at the burlesque house. The announcer was in position to give the cue when Kelly arrived at the benefit the announcer merely dropped the curtain and in an apologetic tone said:

"Ladies and gentlemen, Lew Kelly has been detained and will not be able to appear tonight. A young local boy, I will not tell you his name, has been kind enough to take his self-imposed character, interpreted by him. I hope you will like him."

There was not a murmur as Kelly walked upon the stage as announced to do his act. Never did he work so well, but the people in the audience did not seem to be giving him as they did when he was only doing half as well as he knew how. They figured that the real Kelly was not before them and therefore he could not be half as funny as the comedian himself. When Kelly left the stage there was silence and he proceeded to his dressing room and removed his makeup. He then proceeded to the lobby of the theatre to watch the people come out. The people were commenting on the various acts.

"Say, did you see that ham trying to imitate Lew Kelly?" said one man. "What a nerve some actors have." Kelly, I bet Kelly would have hung his head in shame if he knew that guy giving an imitation of Professor Dope."

Lucky Lynn.

Lynn is to enjoy a musical season of unusual importance, for the fact that this year for most of the great musical productions Lynn will be the first stop for the course in the Olympia Theatre. There will be six concerts in the regular course and the artists engaged for the Lynn Star Course are Schumann-Heink, Mary Garden, Yaego, Alma Gluck, Zimbalist, Lydia Lipkowska and Heinrich Gebnard.

PLYMOUTH THEATRE

On Monday night, at the Plymouth Theatre, A. H. Woods will present the well-known Barney Bernard in "His Honor, Abe Potash." This comedy was written especially for Mr. Bernard by Montague Glass and Jules Eckert Goodman, and might be truly called the fourth of a series, although entirely different in theme and general outline. Its predecessors, namely, "Potash and Perlmutter," "Potash and Perlmutter in Society" and "Business Before Pleasure," have delighted thousands of lovers of true comedy, and the mere announcement that Barney Bernard himself will be in such a play at once again interpret that whimsical, stubborn, cranky, shrewd, impulsive yet affectionate Abe Potash, will be a most welcome bit of theatrical news.

Mr. Bernard will be surrounded with the same excellent supporting cast as appeared with him during the play's year long run at the Bijou Theatre, New York last season.

MAJESTIC THEATRE

D. W. Griffith has put America into "Way Down East" . . . its office, its societies, town, county, its troubles and its fun. This first big motion picture since "Hearts of the World," two years ago, will be shown at the opening of the annual Griffith season at the Majestic Theatre Monday night.

As Boston is the capital of the land in which the story is acted, scenes of life familiar to many will be shown with an extraordinary vividness. Mr. Griffith's stuff spent several days in Boston taking scenes of the city, locating the actual settings of the earlier society scenes in the story.

It is in these scenes that Mrs. Morgan Belmont of Newport and New York takes an interesting role. They are reported to be the first accurate society scenes ever reproduced in the films.

Mr. Griffith and his company journeyed into Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Vermont for many of the most important settings of the story which reveals New England life with a completeness never before attempted.

The action varies from the mirthful drowning of a sleepy kitten to the mad race of an ice break-up on a New England river, where a tensity of action is sustained that has made many of the most important critics declare its equal is unknown on stage or screen.

PARK SQUARE

That honesty is the best policy we all know; but is it safe for a woman, even in these bold days, to be perfectly frank? This is the problem involved in the vital and unique love-story of "The Broken Wing," a new play to be presented by Sargent Aborn, at Selwyn's Park Square Theatre beginning Monday evening.

At any rate, Paul Dickey and Charles W. Goddard, who also wrote "The Misleading Lady" and "The Ghost Breaker," have in this their latest drama, developed a very out of the ordinary love story, that, doomed by the logic of events to carry a handicap of her own race, flows against fate. There are reasons, connected with her bringing up, which cause the girl to prove a mighty poor an American husband, a most unlikely eventuality in the wilderness 150 miles south of the border.

From then on there is not a dull minute in "The Broken Wing." The battle of love is started that wages long and furious but the outcome before one of the greatest surprise finishes known to comedy-drama productions. The cast includes among others: Ines Plummer, Alfreda Ethier, Myrtle Tannehill, Charles Trowbridge, Henry Duggan, George Abbott, Mary Worth and Louis Wolheim.

GAYETY THEATRE

Everyone knows of the sensational success which Jean Bedini presented to the theatregoers of this city last season. But next week at the Gayety Theatre, commencing with the usual Monday matinee, Jean Bedini is again bringing with him, if not greater success when he will present "Twinkle Toes."

"Twinkle Toes" is described as a syncopated bunch of jollity, a maze of melody, shapely girls, clever comedians, and high-class vaudeville specialties. The production is divided into two musical comedy plays and throughout the whirlwind of merry nonsense are introduced travesties on foolish fads.

SOMERVILLE THEATRE

The wholesomeness of life in the smaller communities of the United States contrasted with the existence of the four hundred socials set in the metropolis is the central theme of "The Country Cousin," which will be presented by the Somerville Players next week. The piece is the joint work of Booth Tarkington and Julian Street and its presentation at the Somerville Theatre will unquestionably be received with as great a show of enthusiasm as was accorded it during its Boston run a few seasons ago.

WALDRON'S CASINO

The international comedian, Lew Kelly, comes to Waldron's Casino next week at the head of his own production, "The Lew Kelly Show." Once a year this man, who has made millions laugh with his unique dope character, comes to this section and the lovers of burlesque anxiously await his coming as he is sure to present a show that is far above ordinary attractions. This year Jack Singer has given Kelly a show that is rich in scenery and costumes, the production being new throughout. The book was written by Singer and is at the peculiar character that is interpreted by Kelly. There are two distinct burlesque in the first act. "The Hoardwalk Follies" and the "Mexican Boarders," and they are said to be just what the patrons of this form of entertainment want. The second act will show Kelly at his best in "The Dream Man."

"THE GIRL IN THE SPOTLIGHT"

"The Girl in the Spotlight," Victor Herbert's latest and probably his greatest musical comedy success, will be the next engagement at the Tremont, where it will open September 27. The play, which is produced by the George W. Lederer Company, has just terminated an all-Summer run at the Knickerbocker Theatre, New York. The piece fairly glistens with musical gems of the high Herbert order, while Mr. Lederer has assembled a cast of exceptional merit. Among those in "The Girl in the Spotlight" are Hal Skelly, the famous eccentric dancer and fast becoming recognized as one of the light comedians on the American stage, who is much better than he was in "The Night Boat"; Eddie Dowling, late of Ziegfeld Follies, an exceptional singing and dancing comedian; Nat Carr, brother of Alexander Carr and one of the foremost character comedians in musical comedy, and Mary Milburn, a dainty little prima donna.

MALDEN AUDITORIUM

The attraction for the week at the Malden Auditorium will be a revival by the Temple Stock Company of William Collier's comedy, "Nothing But Lies." This comedy proved to be one of the best of the famous comedian's productions, and followed the success met with by its predecessor, which concerned the merits of veracity.

Dwight Meade will play the role of George, and Miss Rushnell will be seen in the leading feminine role.

EUROPE IN BATTLE AND FIRE

"Europe in Battle and Fire," a spectacle the like which has never been seen in this part of the country, will open tonight on the circus grounds at Huntington avenue.

Spectacle will succeed spectacle, the great fall of Rome being depicted in blazing, bursting conflagrations which will light the heavens for miles around. Added to this will be the burning at the stake of Joan of Arc, the saint to be represented by a prominent Bostonian.

The only fear expressed by the management is that the size of the spectacle and the amount of fire used will cause some of the residents of Boston, who are not aware of the big show in progress, to believe that a general alarm fire is on.

The seats have been so arranged that tonight's spectacle can be viewed with the utmost degree of safety, the entire detail being plainly visible to the spectators.

OPERATIC FIND

The new American contralto, Jeanne Gordon, hailed by all the critics as the New York Metropolitan Opera Company find of the year, has made a Columbia record of the "Madrigal of May" from the Barrymores' famous play, "The Jest." She has also sung for Columbia records this month, "Mon coeur s'ouvre a ta voix," Delilah's seductive aria from Saint-Saens' "Samson and Delilah."

Oscar Seagle, baritone, king of carefree childhood days in his solo, "The Barefoot Trail," and of loved longing in that sweet Scotch ballad, "Lassie o' Mine."

The Dolcette sisters, Rosa, sensational dramatic soprano of the New York Metropolitan Opera Company, and her gifted sister, Carmela, make a new song out of that old Scotch favorite "Comin' thro' the Rye," with their brilliant coloratura vocalisation of this ballad.

REQUEST NIGHT AT POPS

Those patrons of the Pop Concerts in Symphony Hall who thrive on the delightful and finely played music and on the sociability which the Pops offer every night are finding September Pops much to their liking if the crowded audiences are any indication.

One of the biggest nights of the coming week will take place on Friday, September 24, when Williams College will be present in numbers and interpolate their own songs. The biggest night of the week, and, indeed, of the season, however, will be Request Night on Thursday the 23rd. Slips in great numbers are still being counted to determine the exact selections for this program.

SYMPHONY HALL CONCERT

The prospectus of Sunday concerts to be given in Symphony Hall under the management of L. H. Mudgett will offer during the coming season particularly fine list of the greatest singers, violinists and pianists now in America. These concerts which, with the Boston Symphony concerts, comprise the bulk of Boston's musical season, will be opened on Sunday afternoon, October 3, by Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink, the great dramatic contralto, who is an enduring favorite with our public. A joint recital by E. Robert Schmitz, the French pianist of remarkable brilliance and artistic discernment, and Reinald Werrenrath, the favorite baritone of the concert stage, will take place on the following Sunday afternoon, October 10.

LOEW'S ORPHEUM THEATRE

"Jr. Minnie World," or as it is often called "The Mimic World of 1920," is announced as something very special in the way of vaudeville's greatest musical comedy organization and it will be offered at Loew's Orpheum Theatre for the entire week, in addition to five other acts of superb vaudeville. The cast includes twenty people, all accomplished singers and dancers, and their impressions of imitations of the Dolly Sisters, the Courtenay Sisters, and other celebrated stars of the stage. This act has been secured at an enormous expense following its stay of over a year in Greenwich Village, New York, where it has played countless repeat and return engagements and the management feels certain that they will break all records during the coming week. In addition to the presentation of "The Mimic World" the other acts will include Walter Kaufman, the joyful songologist in timely tunes and topics.

BROADWAY THEATRE

The Broadway Theatre, South Boston's own million-dollar vaudeville and moving picture palace, has immediately jumped to the topmost heights of popularity under the personal direction of Manager J. H. Raymond. Residents of the Peninsula find the programs offered every Sunday, and the theatre is crowded to its utmost capacity every afternoon and evening. The feature bill for the big vaudeville acts for the first half of the coming week will be Halfrey, Hall and Brown, a comedy bicycle act consisting of two men and a woman. Other features will be Barnes and Fitzsimmons, in a screaming comedy specialty; Chapell and Walsh in "Discord and Harmony."

The vaudeville feature for the last half of the week is headed by the Maxwell Quintette in a spectacular singing act.

GORDON'S SCOLLAY SQ. OLYMPIA

May Allison's next local screen appearance is scheduled Monday at Gordon's Scollay Square Olympia Theatre, when the enchanting, golden-tinted star will essay the stellar role in "Held in Trust."

PARK THEATRE

For the second week of the new policy at the Park Theatre the management will offer its patrons two first run features which will be seen for the first time in Boston—the principal one being Thos. H. Ince's vitally American drama "Homespun Folks."

It tells of a country lawyer's fight against crooked politics and as a modern picture of small town life holds the mirror truthfully to the real thing. These are the high lights of "Homespun Folks" its realness, its truth and its simple honesty. The characters are real, the plot is a story of human people and the direction is chock full of master touches.

"Under Northern Lights," a thrilling and absorbing story concerning the activities of that famous body of guardians of the law, the Royal North West Mounted Police, is the other feature.

TREMONT TEMPLE

Beginning Monday afternoon at Tremont Temple the new Marshall Neilan photoplay, "Go And Get It," will be presented by Mr. Nathan H. Jordon for a limited engagement. This latest production by the able young producer is promised to be the last word in thrills and active development of a sensational story. The film has a singular aptness to its story which deals with newspaper life and particularly with the adventures of the gorgeous young reporter who serves with entire absolutism the constant demolition of repertorial service to "Go And Get It."

Then there comes a series of mysterious murders that baffle the police and the city's news gatherers. The mystery itself is worthy the composition of an Edgar Allen Poe, and the running to earth of the slayer suggests the Conan Doyle ability of a Monsieur Lecoq. Emil Gaboriesau's hero.

A notable supporting cast headed by Agnes Ayres and Pat O'Malley, are pictured in the roles.

GORDON'S CHELSEA OLYMPIA

Mary Pickford will be seen at Gordon's Chelsea Olympia Theatre in her latest First National production from her own studios, "Heart o' the Hills," adapted from the story by John Fox, Jr., beginning Monday.

GORDON'S OLD SOUTH THEATRE

"Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway," George M. Cohan's celebrated play in which Charles Ray is now appearing in a picturization as a First National attraction, is one of the most human stories Mr. Ray has ever produced.

CRESCENT GARDENS

The magnificent crescent Gardens Ball Room at Revere Beach is undoubtedly the centre of dancing attractions in this part of the country, where dancing will be enjoyed all the year round. The management is keenly alive to the demands of dance fans and always provides the very latest and best attractions. The music is ideal for dancing and is thoroughly appreciated by dancers, as is attested by the throng from far and near who gather at this popular establishment nightly to applaud the splendid musical selections of the dancing orchestra. The Fall is the best season in all the year for dancing and Crescent Gardens is centrally located and is always warm and comfortable, with ample room about the building for the parking of automobiles.

McISAAC says that

"PITTER PATTER," the bright little operetta at the Globe, will be taken into New York very shortly and its Boston run will soon terminate.

"SHAVINGS," the Cape Cod breeze at the Tremont, begins its last week.

"EAST IS WEST" at the Shubert has hit the town between the eyes. Fay Bainter and George Nash are largely responsible.

"HITCHY KOO," with Hitchcock, Sanderson and Huntley, is running smoothly and doing big business at the Colonial.

"IRENE" at the Wilbur is popular as ever, but announcing its last four weeks.

WALKER WHITESIDE in "The Master of Ballantrae" at the Hollis, is very effective in a thrilling and unusual melodrama.

A PERSONAL LETTER

To the People of New England:
(This being the first time in person concerning our work)

The picture of WAY DOWN EAST, which we are presenting at the Majestic Theatre, beginning Monday night next, is just a simple, plain, old-fashioned story for plain, every-day human beings—we are you and I.* If you like this sort of tale, you are most welcome; if you do not, we hope you will come some other time, when we have a different story.

There are no particularly spectacular or massive effects—excepting, perhaps, in the end of the last part of the play embracing the storm scenes and those where the hero and heroine are caught in the ice mass during the river's great break-up—the play mostly depending upon what human interest it may contain.

Nevertheless, it has been most expensive. Over two months with a large working and engineering staff were spent in securing the storm scenes, in picturizing this elemental, resistless force in the great ice-break on the river, raging with the dimmed up waters.

But, if you are interested at all, we imagine it will be in the characters—comic and tragic—and we hope that we have translated some of the beauty and sweetness of American life; that we bring to you a little fragrance from the fresh fields and from the Spring blossoms; a little of the joy of sleighing parties and the music of jingling bells; a little of the glad spirit of merrymaking and innocent dancing and festivities—and we hope forgive absurdities; a little of the story of love, not alone the vision of the ideal love of one man for one woman, but we do pray that we have been able to translate a little of that great love, the sweetest and best of all—Mother Love.

It represents an actual expenditure of over eight hundred thousand dollars. If any one is interested enough, we will gladly furnish audit from Price, Waterhouse & Company—this being perhaps the most expensive entertainment since Caesar plated the Arena with silver for the citizens of ancient Rome. We know that million dollar productions have often been advertised. Our Press Department will doubtless claim this a two million dollar production, but we are telling you the simple truth.

Also, few realize that all this has nothing to do with the merits of the picture. In the dark the dice of fate are lifted, and when we throw it is for you, oh! masters of the game, to say whether we win or lose.

(Signed) D. W. Griffith

HARRY paused a minute, overcome by his feelings; then he continued hopefully: "She's going to be married, Governor, the wedding day is all set—to a young fellow with plenty of money—but my wife, she's found it out—she's found my secret and she smells coin—yes, Governor, you see how it is, how I've got to get out—she's going to blackmail my child and kill her happiness—she thinks I'm safe here till I die and she can go ahead—if I was out, Governor, she'd be afraid—afraid I'd cut her throat."

Heliotrope Harry clenched his fists about an imaginary throat and hatred flared into his eyes. The Governor shivered. He even shook his head as he glanced at the warden.

"Good heavens, Pyne, it's utterly impossible to free this man! Why, we'd be signing the woman's death warrant—I don't know what she's done, but whatever it is, we'd have a murder on our hands and there'd be no end of a tumult."

Asked Assurance

"Wait a minute, Governor," Harry broke in.

Pyne headed him off—"that's enough for the moment."

"What assurance have we got that if I sign this pardon he won't go right out and kill his former wife?"

Pyne hesitated a second as though he were afraid the assurance he had to offer did not possess the value it should have.

"You have his word, Governor—he wants to save his child—and he swears on his honor he won't lay a finger on his wife or get anyone else to harm her."

With an almost frantic eagerness Heliotrope Harry turned to the man in the warden's chair seemed unconvinced. He pointed to the pardon and glanced at Pyne as though to say, "Would YOU dare to sign it on the word of a convict?"

The Warden showed his faith in Heliotrope Harry by calmly picking up the pen and writing his name, then he dipped the pen in the ink and held it out for the Governor.

But the latter did not sign; he held the pen for a moment and looked at the prisoner. Heliotrope Harry said no word, but he pushed the picture of Alice before the other's eyes as though that were his final appeal. His figure trembled, his hand shook. The Governor spoke sharply:

"Hasdock, forget you are No. 48, forget I am the Governor of this State—tell me man to man—have I your word of honor?"

Harry could only mumble. "You have my word of honor."

Signed Pardon

The Governor's pen descended and he scrawled his signature on the pardon; the Warden blotted it, and Heliotrope Harry, his freedom now become a real, a living thing, fell on his knees and sobbed.

In such fashion was the first step in the lifer's new existence consummated. He was to walk back into the world he had taken so lightly a man with a mission, a sacred mission, and he had given his word never to harm the woman he had divorced, not to allow harm to come to her through agency of his.

That vow Heliotrope Harry swore in his heart never to violate. Made man to man, his word was to be kept like a man. The Governor motioned to Pyne and the warden raised the prisoner and led him out, the photographer and reporters following in a body.

* * * * * * *

Jos Hasdock had come to terms with Mr Sipson. An ample check, speedily converted into cash, had been the result of their visit to the latter's pawn shop, and the ex-wife of Heliotrope Harry went to live at a hotel, whither she felt sure, from guarded inquiries, Alice and her new-found friends would come on a visit to shop for wedding finery.

Jos Hasdock possessed patience. There was need for it. Her plan of attack required no more than that. Her ingenious brain saw too much risk in playing her cards before Alice Hale became Mrs. Jimmie Andrews.

She foresaw the possibility of a reconsideration on the part of the millionaire. It was one thing to welcome a nameless lad into his household, quite another to welcome the daughter of a life convict and a notorious mother.

Well-Known Figure

Mrs. Hasdock became a well-known figure about the corridors of the hotel, but she conducted herself with the propriety of a lady of unimpeachable character and waited without an inward tremor for the advent of her daughter Ankle, known as Alice Hale.

It was comforting to realize that Harry, her ex-husband, of whom she stood in mortal terror, was safely behind prison bars for the remainder of his natural life. If he had been at large she would not have breathed so easily. She laughed more than once at the peculiar turn of the wheel of Fate that had thrown the valuable information about Alice her way. And no one knew the facts but herself and Harry. The game seemed easy and certain of success.

Joe's information was correct. Alice, Jimmie, Mabel and her father arrived at the hotel after a pleasant journey from the South. They were all happy, and as the girls walked past the woman on the velvet lounge the latter smiled, anticipating an even richer haul than she had imagined.

Mrs. Hasdock, watching the hotel register had learned that Mr. Andrews had engaged rooms on the third floor. She herself had been living on an upper floor. Before their arrival she asked for a room on the third corridor on the plea that the noise from the lifts made her nervous. The clerk, desirous of obliging such a rich guest promptly assigned her to new quarters.

Kept Watch

Mrs. Hascock thus situated was in a position to keep watch on the comings and goings of the Andrews party.

On the morning after their arrival they appeared shortly before lunch with their arms laden with bundles of all sizes and laughing gaily proceeded to their rooms. Once on the third floor Mabel relieved Mr. Andrews of some of his packages and went into her room followed by Alice, while Jimmie and his father proceeded a little further along to their apartment.

While this little scene was being enacted, Mrs. Hascock slipped from the elevator and, passing along the hall, entered the room next to Mabel's, leaving her key in the door on the outside.

Jimmie, anxious for a moment with his betrothed, slipped out and knocking softly on her door answered her summons to enter and discovered her gazing with naive delight on what appeared to her a wild array of extravagance.

Jimmy took her hands reverently: "I shall have to express my appreciation of your good judgment," he said, and drawing her to him kissed her.

Alice has a happy hour showing Jimmie some of her purchases for her trousseau.

When a Girl Marries

By Ann Lisle

MY lunch with Daisy was a failure. I felt that the girl was at once bored and guarded. She eluded me. To her evident agony and to my real embarrassment she insisted on reverting to the ring again with raw honesty.

"I'm in your power, Mrs. Harrison. You can do what you like with me, you know. My life is really in fee to you. I'm a thief and you know it, and I'm ready to pay off in any way you see fit."

From this attitude I couldn't move the girl, and as it was evidently no less than torture to her to be with me I made up my mind this must be the last she'd ever see of me unless she chose to have it otherwise. This fitted in with what I had half promised Jim when agreeing that I'd rely on his judgment rather than my own in future. I wouldn't be "Mrs. Fixit" any longer. Leaving Daisy to her own devices was a good way to prove the sincerity of my promise to Jim and myself.

As we finished our lunch I said with seeming lightness, which held a promise nevertheless:

"Daisy, I can see that you're busy—that your new work absorbs you. I don't want you to slip out of my life the way Kate did. But I can't force myself on you. Won't you—when you feel you really want to see me—let me hear from you. And make it soon."

"Why, of course! I'll call you up as soon as I have the time," agreed Daisy in a tone of evident relief.

I almost felt that meant never, and after some shopping I returned in great dejection of spirit to my empty apartment. Hardly had I arrived, however, when a caller was announced. It was Irma Warren, and I went out to greet her in very real delight.

An Unusual Girl

She wore the simplest of navy-blue foulards dotted in white, and a neat little white collar and cuffs, and style she seemed to affect topped it. She had the look of radiant health and wholesome simplicity as rare as it is refreshing.

"I'm in a hurry, I'm in," she said, unpretentiously, "I know very few girls, and—and I always did so want to know you. But you seemed so busy, and I felt sort of ashamed of being useless and old-fashioned," she added in a breathless rush, as if she were afraid she'd not get it said unless she got it out quickly.

"And I'm glad I'm in," I replied, "and delighted that I've joined the idle classes if it's to let me know you."

"Do you mean it, really?" asked the niece of the great Mr. Haldane with the utmost simplicity. "I've wanted to come every day, but I wasn't sure I wouldn't be intruding. Then today I met your brother on the street, and he told me Mr. Harrison was away, and I thought you might be a little lonely as I am sometimes."

"I'm very lonely," I confessed. "And nothing nicer than this visit could have come to break it."

"Would you come home to dinner with me?" Irma Warren eagerly asked. "This is uncle's night out. You see, Aunt Ann chose exactly the same day to go to the Chess Club."

"You have not met many people in the city yet," I said half to myself, "but when you do they won't let you sit home sewing and reading."

"I do like to go to the theatre or to a good concert. And uncle is so kind. We go every Thursday and Monday in season," she replied. "But I suppose you mean with young people. That would be nice. Do you suppose they'd like me?"

An Invitation

"I know it," I declared. "Now, I've a suggestion. This is a warm evening—one of the last, I suppose. Instead of going to your home for dinner, won't you be my guest at a roof garden?"

"I'd love it. Uncle has taken me once or twice, but the drafts are bad for his rheumatism. Can we go without an escort?"

There was a delightful note in that question. The cry of youth, of youth, of Phyllis for Corydon, and I determined that my Lyonty Irma should have an escort, and an attentive one. So, leaving her ensconced in the living room with a good book, I went promptly to the telephone and called first Carl Booth, whose line didn't answer, and then Anthony Norreys, whose good Nora informed me that "Mr. Tony has left home for the week-end."

Grateful and disappointed that I couldn't make things gay and festive for the dear, simple girl waiting for me so trustingly, I started back and met Hedwig in the hall.

"Gentleman calling," she said.

"Now, isn't that nice of Dame Fate! She provides an escort," I reflected, giving a little skip as I hurried back to the living room.

Standing over the couch from which Irma Warren was just rising to greet him was a familiar bulky figure. I was just in time to see him carry Irma's hand to his lips and to note the painful crimson which flooded her face. Then, as if sensing my presence, Tom Mason turned with a ready explanation:

"I stepped in to see if I could motor you and Jimmie up the road for a bite. Dennis Anne. And, he said, my kindly and watchful guardian angel sends Miss Warren to dominate me. You'll come, won't you, dear lady?"

"Why, we were going out to dinner," replied Irma Warren, guilelessly, yet with evident pleasure. "I thought probably Mrs. Harrison had asked you and that you'd been right in the neighborhood to get here so promptly."

Why, as Tom Mason ran his eyes over the girl's face with evident admiration, why did I suddenly see in her place Daisy Condon, with a dazzle of bronze bright hair about her face?

"IF you believe," she said, "that my mind controls my heart, why don't you make it an intellectual argument with me? Why not appeal to my reason? Because I—I am intelligent enough to be open to conviction—if your logic proves sounder than—mine."

"I can't make love to you logically. Love doesn't admit it."

"Love is logical—or it's piffle!"

"I don't know how to make intellectual love."

"You'd better learn."

"Could you give me a tip?" he asked timidly.

A Vital Revelation

Then Helen threw back her pretty head and began to laugh with that irresponsible unfeigned, full throated and human laughter that characterized the primitive girl when her naive sense of humor was stirred to response by her lover of the cave.

For Helen had caught a glimpse of this modern young caveman's intellectual brutality and had temper for the first time in her life, and it was a vital revelation to the girl.

He had whacked her, verbally, violently, until, to her infuriated astonishment, it was made plain to her that there was nothing more to him than she had ever reckoned with. He had hurt her pride, dreadfully, he had lanced her character about without mercy—handled her with disdainful vigor and virility that opened her complacent brown eyes to a new vision and a new interpretation of man.

"Phil," she murmured, "do you realize that you were positively common in what you said to me upon that hill?"

"I know I was."

"You told me——" a slight shudder passed over her and he felt it in the shoulder that touched his—"you told me that you—you were 'fed up'!"

"I was!"

"And you, a poet—a man with an almost divine facility of language——"

"Sure," he said, grinning; "I'm artist enough to know the value of vulgarity. It gives a wonderful punch. Helen—once in a lifetime."

"Oh, Phil! You horrify me. I didn't understand that you are just a plain, everyday, bad-tempered, brutal, selfish and violent man——"

"Dearest, I am! And thank God you are woman enough to stand for it. Are you?"

She Surrenders

They had reached the house and were standing on the porch now, her hands restlessly twisting in his sun-browned grasp, her pretty head averted, refusing to meet his eyes.

"Are you?" he repeated sternly.

"Am I what? Oh, Phil, you hurt me—my rings hurt——"

"Then don't twist your fingers. And answer me. Are you woman enough to stand for the sort of everyday human man that you say I am? Are you?"

She said something under her breath.

"Did you say yes?" he demanded. She nodded, not looking at him.

Before he could kiss her she slid out of his grasp with a low exclamation of warning and, looking around, he beheld the Belters, arm-in-arm, approaching across the lawn.

"Pido!" he muttered, "down!" And he followed his divinity into the house.

CHAPTER XXXII.

HELEN kept her own counsel as long as the Belters remained at Runner's Rest, but as soon as they had departed she went to Stephanie's room and made a clean breast of it.

"What on earth do you suppose has happened to me, Steve?" she demanded, standing by the day-bed on which Stephanie was stretched out reading a novel and absorbing chocolates.

"What?" asked Stephanie, lifting her gray eyes.

"Well, there's the very deuce to pay with Phil Grayson. He isn't a bit nice to me. He isn't like himself. He bullies me."

"Why do you let him?"

"I—don't know. I resent it. He's entirely too bossy. He's taken possession of me and he behaves abominably."

"Sentimentally?"

"Yes."

"But you don't have to endure it!" exclaimed Stephanie, astonished.

"I'd don't submit," said Helen, "I shall lose him. He'll go away. He says he will."

"Well, do you care what Phil Grayson does?" demanded Stephanie, amazed.

Then that intellectual, capable, intelligent and superbly healthy girl flopped down on her knees by Stephanie's day-bed and, laying her lovely head on the pillow, began to whimper.

"I—I don't know what's the matter with me," she stammered, "but my mind is full of that wretched man every minute of the day and half of the night. He is absolutely shameless; he makes love to me t-tyrannically. It's impossible for a girl to keep her reserve—her d-dignity with a m-man who takes her into his arms and k-kisses her whenever he chooses"

"What!" cried Stephanie, sitting bolt upright and staring at her friend. "Do you mean to tell me that Phil is that sort of man?"

"I didn't thing so, either," explained Helen. "I've known him for ages. He's been so considerate and attentive and sweet to me—so gentle and self-effacing. I thought I could e-count on him. But a girl can't tell anything about a man—even when he's been an old and trusted friend of years."

"What are you going to do about it?" asked Stephenie, blankly.

"Do? I suppose I'll go on doing what he wishes. I suppose I'll marry him. It looks that way. I don't seem to have any will power. * * * It's such an odd sensation to be hulled."

"Are you in love with him?"

"I don't know. I suppose I am. It makes me simply furious. * * * But I guess I am, Steve. * * * If he'd behaved as agreeably and pleasantly as he always had behaved I should never have cared for him except in a friendly way. He always has paid his courtship to me in the nicest way. * * * It was quite ideal, not disturbing, and we exchanged intellectual views quite happily and contentedly. * * * And then, suddenly, he—he flew into a most frightful temper and he told me that he was 'fed up.' My dear, can you imagine my rage and amazement? * * *

"And then he told me what he thought of me—oh, Steve!—the most horrid things ever said about a girl he said to me! I was breathless! I felt as though he had beaten me and dragged me about by my hair. * * * And then—I don't know how it happened—but I w-waited for him, and we walked home together, and I understood him to say that I'd got to love him if I were a human girl." * * * And I said, 'Yes.'

"So—it's that way now with us. * * * And when I think about it I am still bewildered and furious with him * * * But I don't dare let him go. * * * There are other girls, you know."

Stephanie lay very still. Helen rose presently, turned and walked slowly to the door. There she paused for a moment, then turned. And Stephanie saw in her brown eyes an expression entirely new to her.

The Rhyming Optimist

By Aline Michaelis

ACROSS the hills, you say, they're lying, green pastures, fairer far than they for their beauty you keep sighing through the long and humdrum days. You feel sure that over yonder, far along the winding road, skies are brighter, smiles are fonder, you would have a lighter load. But I have a sneaking notion, one by which I set great store, that the lands across the ocean cannot beat our native shore. And no hill whose distant haze glimmer purple through the gloam rivals this one clad in daisies, for it holds my heart and home. 'Tis a fact that, here or yonder, things are pretty much the same, and no matter where they wander, some folks find it very tame. Yet another fellow running right alongside as their mate may say: "My, but this is stunning; this is what I class as great. You will never hear me kicking while I'm on this thoroughfare; couldn't ask for better picking, finer scenery anywhere." So, it's not the road you travel through the changing sun and shade, whether it be dirt or gravel, rocky climb or pleasant grade. Now I do not claim I'm telling any novel fact or new, but the theme on which I'm dwelling has one merit—it is true. You will find it seldom only where a certain roadway lies that can make it gay or lonely; fault or charm is in your eyes. If some reached those distant places, that far land of their desire, they would still find barren spaces, every rose would have its briar. And those chaps who always banker for the farthest pastures' bliss, would find there the same old canker they have ever found in this.

Anecdotes of the Famous

According to Louis Calvert, Author of "Problems of the Actor," the late Beerbohm Tree had not the faculty of feeling the primary emotions and projecting them, so to speak, across the footlights. So he was compelled to get his effects by means of artifice, which—as in the case of the orange he carried as Wooley—was seldom in accordance with the true significance of the character depicted. Two curious examples are given by Mr. Calvert of this actor's strange ingenuity in devising crowd-compelling business. He could only make Svengali's death impressive by falling across a table with his head hanging over the edge so that the audience saw it upside down, with the eyes staring weirdly in death. And as the Baron in "Jim the Penman," when Jim was lying dead in the chair, and he had to make the audience realize that he knew the forger was dead he walked up to the body in an almost unconcerned way, passed his hand over the brows, and coolly wiped the death-sweat off his hand on his coat!

Good Short Stories

Gilbert K. Chesterton, the nimble witted, is at the moment engaged on a group of highly fanciful short stories. Although Chesterton is probably the largest man, pound for pound, in all Intellectual England, and although Chesterton probably smokes the heaviest tobacco in all pipe smoking England, and although Chesterton probably runs the stiffest typewriter (if one may judge from a look at his manuscript) in all writing England, Gilbert K. Chesterton unquestionably writes the lightest brightest, most glorious fantastic prose. No one writing English can compare with him; he is different in a different different way. The first story of the group upon which the surry-minded G. K. C. is now engaged is called "The Fantastic Friends." "The Fantastic Friends" will appear as you open your November Harper's Bazar.

ABOUT OUR GOOD FRIEND Cahill

Copyright, 1920, by The Ledger Syndicate

CAHILL VARIATIONS — Lowe, Quick, O'Cahill. RACIAL ORIGIN—Irish. SOURCE—A given name.

HISTORICAL record is the basis for including Lowe and Quick as variations of the Irish family name of Cahill, for, strictly speaking, they are not the same name at all, though both Lowe and Quick, when of Irish origin, are traceable back to the same person.

The Irish form of the family name is "O'Cathail," which, it should be remembered, is not pronounced with a "th" like that in English, but more like the English spelling which actually is used in representing it.

The Irish family name is derived from the given name of "Cathal," which means "valor."

For the most part the "O'Cathails" were descendants of or followers of Cathal, the son of Conor, nicknamed "Conor na Luinge Luaithe," or "Connor of the Swifter Sailing Ship," a chieftain prominent in ancient Irish history.

Subsequent to the English conquest of Ireland the native families in many sections were compelled by law to adopt English surnames. As a rule they did not pick them at random, choosing rather an English translation of the Irish family name or an English name which sounded as much as possible like it.

In this manner some of the O'Cathails adopted the name of Quick, from the Irish word of that meaning in the title of the historical "Conor na Luinge Luaithe," while others adopted the name of Lowe from its similarity in sound to "Luaithe."

The Adventures of Ann

By Hal Coffman

CHAPTER XVIII.

THE next morning after the trip in Harwood's car to the country inn where they had dinner, the mysterious woman came down stairs to see Ann. She found her alone, busily doing the housework, which Ann thoroughly hated. She gave the broom an angry toss into the corner and pouted her pretty face, saying, "Oh, how I hate this stuff! Sweeping, dusting and washing dishes. I get so tired and sick of it I would like to jump out the window."

The woman put her arm around her and led her over to the couch. "Come here, you impetuous child, and let's talk. I've been wanting to tell you some things for a long time. I can't tell you ALL of them now, but some day I hope to be able to. I want to tell you about a young girl I once knew—oh, so long ago. She didn't live in a big city as you do, but in a little town. She felt very often as you now feel, hated to do the little things around the house that are so necessary, and longed for the gay and so-called bright life she had read and heard about.

"Her chance came one day—I won't say how, but perhaps as your chance is nearing, even now. She left it all and went away, 'way off to countries she had never known, except in books. She had the opportunity to travel and see the parts of the world she thought she would like. The life of Japan, the cherry blossoms, Fujiyama, the wonder mountain, that looks so marvellous as you come into the harbor at Yokohama—you think of the romance of the Orient. The romance that reads so well in books but is so hard to find when you are actually there."

At this Ann looked at her sharply and, leaning over, gathered her in her arms, saying, "Why it couldn't have been YOU? WAS it you? Why, you are crying."

ISSUES BUOYANT IN NEW YORK

Mexican Petroleum Is Feature of Market With an Advance of Ten Points

By BROADAN WALL.

Registered U. S. Patent Office.

New York, Sept. 18.—Not a bear dared show his head in the stock market yesterday, and as a result there was almost a bear panic before the day was done. It was certain that the market would be supported, and especially the bargain issues. Besides every trader felt that if he attacked the market he would be contributing to whatever unsettlement might result.

There were thousands of men in the street ready to take physical action if necessary to repress any raiding. Persons who have been talking radicalism were strangely silent. The bomb failed to kill innocent men and women, but it damaged the Bolshevist scheme of things so severely that its effect proved constructive. Among bankers and traders the same sentiment was expressed.

Mexican Petroleum was the feature of every market with an advance of 10 points. In other issues the shorts took warning and the result was that the last hour of trading saw the market almost buoyant. At the very opening of the day support was extended to U. S. Steel and a few of the standard shares, but the market quickly demonstrated its ability to take care of itself without artificial aid.

The most important news development of the day was the information coming from England that financial bankers to the effect that Lloyd George's measures for handling the coal strike had killed all possibilities of a serious situation in England. In fact there may be no strike at all. This information sent Mexican Petroleum preferred up three points and added to the confusion of shorts in other stocks.

Official announcement was made by the Interstate Commerce Commission that the Lackawanna Railroad Company of New Jersey applied for permission to capitalize its surplus of $10,000,000, and that the intention was to combine the Lackawanna with some other railroad system. Erie immediately took the hint and modestly advanced a point to a new high record.

Feasibility

Is the problem of probabilities. Dealing in probabilities is likely to be hazardous unless the problem can be analyzed to satisfactorily answer these three points:

Is the business essential?
Are its plans sound?
Is its management in safe hands?

Large Rail Tonnage Needed

The Iron Trade Review says that indications now are that a much larger tonnage of rails will be required for 1921 delivery than has been the case for some years back. The roads have placed a heavy tonnage before the mills which they are ready to close when prices for next year are definitely announced. It is estimated at Chicago that pending car inquiries call for 250,000 tons of steel.

United Shoe Machinery Corporation

The Directors of this Corporation have declared a dividend of 1¾% on the Preferred capital stock. They have also declared a dividend of 50 cents per share on the Common capital stock. The dividends on both Preferred and Common stock are payable October 1, 1920 to stockholders of record at the close of business September 25, 1920.

STOCKS GO UP IN BOSTON

Local Market Is Strong and Active; Curb Trading Confined to Few Issues

Stocks were strong and active in Boston yesterday, the turnover being the largest for several months. The market broadened and there were big gains by several issues, including United Fruit, Wickwire and United Drug common, with still more advances by many. Trading was active from the start. It was stimulated by the demand for stocks in New York. Transactions in Highest totalled more than 1,700 shares, while Alaska Gold, Elder, Carson Hill, U. S. Smelting and Gray & Davis were also active. Gray & Davis attracted attention by its unusual range, closing unchanged after showing two points less and two points more. It sold at a new low for the year, as did Elder. But Elder rallied and became one of the strongest issues on the list.

COPPERS IMPROVED.

Coppers were unchanged at the start but had a firm tone during the morning and improved in the afternoon, although the volume of commercial is reported. Strength of United Fruit made it prominent, it showing up 5¾ at the close. Wickwire advanced 5 and United Drug 2. Point Alexandria was in demand, with Copper Range, Mohawk, Island Creek, Greenfield Tobacco common, Quincy, Mass Hill, Swift International, Amoskeag, American Sugar and Massachusetts Gas all gaining 1 to 2 points. Steel gained fractionally. Waltham Watch and Agricultural Chemical receded a point each, while Boston Elevated, Leather and Swift & Co. sustained small losses.

QUIET DAY ON CURB.

Trading was quiet on the Curb, although it had a broader and more active list than ordinarily. Many of the first hour the pace slackened on this exchange. The active issues were Eureka, Porcupine Premier and Boston & Montana. Outside of those issues trading was on a small scale.

Gains included White Knob Ely, Eureka, 2 cents; Seven Metals, 1 cent; Ophir, 2 cents; Jerome Verde, 5 cents; Imperial, 1 cent, and Crystal, 1 cent.

Among the declines were Southwestern Miami, part paid, 5 cents; Madonna, 1-16; Boston & Montana, 2 cents; Superior Oil, 3 cents; Texans, 1 cent, and Cactus Gulf, 5 cents.

POSTAL SAVINGS PLAN ADVOCATED BY MEYER

Eugene Meyer, Jr. has made the following recommendations for the improvement in this country of a postal savings system:

1—Authorize the payment of a higher rate of interest, say 3½%, on postal savings deposits.

2—Extend the number of offices now authorized to receive deposits.

3—Change the regulation that permits of withdrawals of not more than $100 in any one year, or for part of a year.

4—Increase the limit of deposits of $5 per cent of the funds are redeposited in banks approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

5—Permit the conversion of war deposits with United States securities.

6—Authorize the loan by the Postmaster General of funds to the Federal Reserve banks at 2½ per cent, which banks in turn would loan at 6 per cent, with the difference in connection with the expenses of the system to be the cost of the money to the United States government.

Statement that the expansion of the Postal Savings System would increase the deficiency in the Treasury and thus be disastrous in determining the rating upon which Liberty bonds are based.

DAINTY BLOUSES FOR FALL WEAR

Boston Shops Offer Great Variety at Bargain Prices; Hat Combinations Bewitching

Probably the Winter suit is the topic of most concern to the woman adjusting her wardrobe to Winter needs. This disposed of, the next thing uppermost in her mind is the blouse to go with the suit. And, shopping for this blouse, Mrs. Boston, this Fashion Week, will be agreeably surprised. For, most emphatically this Autumn, prices are down. Beautiful, dainty, alluring blouses may be bought for as low as $1.95. And, for five dollars and even less, blouses dressy enough for theatre or dinner, may be found in charming profusion.

The offerings, in the blouse line, of one lower Tremont street specialty store, is most typical of the shops. Take the blouse for $1.95, to begin with. The materials are white voiles, lawns, batistes, and colored crepeline.

There is nothing in Boston shops crisper than these inexpensive little blouses, with dainty blue edging to their little ruffles, or their accordion pleated frills, or their Lithuanian or Irish lace finish to collar and cuffs.

A HAND-MADE BLOUSE.

The hand-made blouse for $2.95 is no delusion in this lower Tremont street shop this week. It is there in all its well-bred loveliness, with its long collar and turn-back cuffs, hand drawn, in block effect, finished with narrow ruffle, hand hemstitched. "After all," the lady woman has said to herself many times this week, as she looked at the remarkable showing of blouses, "after all, there is nothing so good as the wash blouse, and here are genuine bargains before bargain time."

Here and there, in shops all about, the season's booking just beyond this last day of Fashion Week sees so many things necessary and beautiful in heavy crepe silk petticoat, for instance, with jersey top as well, with a deep accordion plaited flounce in changeable colors. Just the chic touch to go with the smartly tailored suit.

SMART FROCK FOR GIRLS.

Then a mignonette frock, which a Washington and Winter street shop is showing, is most suited to the young girl for school or outdoor wear. It is smartly made, with long, loose lines. A girdle and vestee add to the style. Another frock, very girlish, shown by the same store, sells for $25. Its simple bodice is braided and she wears the sleeves are short, a saucy little sash, very narrow, floats from the waist in front, and the accordion plaited skirt is gathered in at the hem, with harem effect. Plare flip panniers lend a touch to this little gown which very much becomes the young girl.

There are many women who wish a smart Winter shoe, high and, at the same time, wish to find such that fits the natural lines of the foot, without being too orthopedic. Black peau de soie leather in which the shoe is made of, or, also, brown leather, for vamps, with cloth tops to harmonize with military heels. Other good shoes at this store, suitable for wear with the Winter suit, sell from $10 to $13. Any woman may find this Autumn good shoes at prices which she can afford.

HATS BEWITCHING.

The hat combinations, again and again, are bewitching in whatever shop they are displayed. At the Winter and Washington streets shop, just mentioned, the duvetyn and velvet, with felt combinations, are departures and most pleasing to choose from. The trimmings are varied. flowers are always good. Burnt and fancy ostrich are new and pleasing. Hats this Autumn are large and small, but each has a touch of individuality, and the colors are subdued, at times, to blend with subdued suits. At other times the colors are brilliant, to relight up Winter with cheerful glow and to contrast with the sedate suit.

There are a few real bargains, necessary to any Fall shopping. First, what do you think of boys' corduroy suits for $12? They are for sale in reassuring quantity at one of the oldest stores in Boston. Just waiting for the schoolboy and his mamma. Suits of the same material for younger boys sell at $7.50.

DROP IN PRICES.

This same store makes a specialty of really charming hats for $7.50. Again the school girl will find an all-wool, plaid skirt for $10. The same thing for immediate wear with her velveteen jacket. Just the thing, later on, to wear sizzling under her little fur jacket. Again, gingham dresses for the small girl sell for $3.50, and all-wool, navy serges, for the younger school girl, from six to fourteen, sell for $6. These are fitted with trig little pantalet leather belts.

The Fashion Week of 1920 ends today in Boston, though the styles and the bargains have only begun. After the higher prices of last year, any woman shopping in Boston likes best of these as she notices the drop in the prices of so many things. Never were the shops more lovely. The buying season is fairly launched and the Boston woman already has seen the wisdom of making her selections now while the lines are so complete.

SWIG ATTACKS FEDERAL BANK

Foss Also Tells of Huge Profits, During Tremont Trust Company Celebration

Charges that the Federal Reserve Bank is "a private institution and that the officers are reaping harvests from its earnings" were made by Simon Swig at a banquet in Young's Hotel in honor of the sixth anniversary of the Tremont Trust Company, of which he is vice-president. The banquet followed a day of celebration, in which an informal reception took place at the bank, with presentations of souvenirs to all men and women depositors.

Three former Governors—Samuel W. McCall, John L. Bates and Eugene N. Foss—were among the speakers at the banquet. Ex-Governor Foss referred to the Federal Reserve Bank as "a bank that one branch made net earnings of 210 per cent.; that the Boston branch has cleared 130 per cent., and that the lowest profit, made by the Texas branch, was 41 per cent. He continued:

SHOULD GIVE UP PART.

"Those were public institutions; they were created to help people. Why should these banks make excess profits? I don't believe those profits should go into the Federal Treasury. Those banks should be content with a fair return on the capital employed, but the large profits earned should go to the business interests of the country."

Ex-Governor McCall, who is connected with the Old South Trust Company, paid a tribute to the character of Mr. Swig. President Asa F. French of the Tremont Trust Company gave an address of welcome; District Attorney Joseph C. Pelletier and United States Attorney Daniel J. Gallagher praised the management of the company.

Mr. Swig was enthusiastically greeted when he arose to speak. He said, after the cheering and applause had subsided:

"I am happy tonight—yes, so happy. The only regret I have is that I did not have the opportunity of an early education so that I could express my gratitude and appreciation in the public. I will endeavor, however, to say to you in plain language —language you will all be able to understand—that I am a self-made wealth in the world today it wouldn't make me happier than I am.

REVIEWS HIS FIGHT.

"I find myself surrounded by former Governors and by prosecuting attorneys and others, not because of any obligation I am under to them, but because they appreciate the man who is trying in an unselfish way to work for the best interests of the public."

Continuing, he referred to his "uphill fight" in establishing the Tremont Trust banking business; of the "treachery" he had encountered. He defied his critics to show that he had ever done a dishonest or unfair act in his business career. He also referred to the only "wrongful act" of which he had been guilty—in advertising and forcing other banks to pay 5 per cent. interest on deposits.

The Tremont Trust Company souvenirs were conspicuous in the downtown business section all day yesterday. Each vari-colored quill pens presented to male depositors. Women guests at the reception received each a box of chocolates. According to Judge Louis Swig, the bank has 50,000 depositors, 50,000 quills and 25,000 boxes of the candy were given away during the day.

Article X. Perpetual Mortgage, Says Walsh

HERE IS ARTICLE X.:

"The members of the League undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the League. In case of any such aggression or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression, the Council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled."

By DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senator From Massachusetts.

MY opinion of Article X. is contained in a speech made by me in the United States Senate March 16, 1920, which I quote herewith:

"Under Article X. the United States may be compelled to join with foreign nations in preserving and protecting against external aggression not only the new boundaries set up in the treaty, but all the previously existing boundaries and the political relations of nations, no matter how unjustly these boundaries were obtained or how tyrannical the super-governments. The obligation stated there is direct and specific.

"Are we ready and willing to preserve the territorial integrity and present political arrangements of other nations against exterior aggression? I, for one, do not propose to support any reservation that does not clearly and plainly relieve us from from this obligation. I am unwilling to have the United States, through Article X., execute a perpetual mortgage upon the resources and lives of our people."

Housing Problem Demands Action by Mayor Peters

The Mayor will not accede to the unanimous vote of the City Council in favor of an appropriation to relieve the shortage in dwellings within the limits of Boston.

His refusal to act in upon the advice of his very excellent corporation counsel, Mr. Arthur D. Hill. Mr. Hill advises him that in his opinion the city could not legally appropriate the money, because in his opinion the emergency which must exist before the appropriation is made and to meet which the appropriation is made is not sufficient within the meaning of the Constitution and the statute passed under it.

The Mayor is the Mayor. He also happens to be a lawyer by profession. He is a man of greater general experience than his corporation counsel. Assuming an equal intelligence, the Mayor is better qualified to decide the question than Mr. Hill, his corporation counsel, because it is a question of fact and not of law. Moreover, the fact that the City Council unanimously considered that the emergency WAS sufficient ought to be much more persuasive and convincing than the corporation counsel's legalistic opinion with the limitation of his very appropriate and proper legal mindedness.

The Mayor ought not to have hidden behind the petticoats of Mr. Hill. The people of Boston are in distress for dwelling houses. It is a fact, and the rates that they are obliged to pay are unreasonable rates. That is a fact too that needs no lawyer's assistance to ascertain. The practice by American executives of using their legal advisers to enable them to kill legislation without assuming the responsibility for it is an evil practice that is altogether too common.

It is perfectly plain that Mayor Peters did not want to engage in this expense, and it would have been better for him to have said so frankly. Mr. Hill would also have rendered very much better public service if he had declined to undergo this process of temporary transfusion of brains in order to let his brains function for the Mayor's on the particular question.

We have tried now a law regulating rents and like laws regulating street railways, gas and electric light companies and railroads, it bids fair to be a failure.

So far as the increase of rent is justified by increased cost generally we cannot complain, but so far as it is based upon the shortage of buildings and their consequent monopoly value, the increase in rent is not justified, and an increase of building is about the only thing that will stop it. If private individuals will not take the risk of a fluctuating market of materials and labor, then the government is a last resort.

The issue is clear and its solution does not require Mr. Hill's, but rather Mr. Peters' brain; not Mr. Hill's, but Mr. Peters' political courage.

Italy the Moral Leader of Governments of Europe

Our citizens of Italian blood in America are very proud these days of their government, and they have a just reason to be proud. Of all the governments in Europe today, the Italian government is showing the greatest statesmanship, the greatest poise, the greatest distinterestedness and the greatest sense of justice.

After the war was over the Italian government had to undergo a hard trial. Under the leadership of President Wilson, its allies had betrayed Italy. Mr. Wilson, after having abandoned every one of his own principles which conflicted with the British and French interests, and after proving faithless to all his promises to his own people, sought to recover his reputation for moral stamina and good faith by showing strength on the stronger side.

Italy, the weakest physically of the allies, was the victim which he selected to exhibit to the world the impartiality and courage with which he applied his principles. After Mr. Wilson conceded to France and England all the spoils provided for in the secret treaties, he denied to Italy practically the best fruits of her victory.

The Italian government has made the most of it. It refused to become a party to the French military imperialism, or the British colonial aggrandizements. It refused to join in the persecution of Russia because it was a government of workingmen and peasants, and has entered into friendly relations with that government. It is advocating decent treatment of Germany and of the return to a period of peace and good will toward men in Europe.

Slowly, but surely, the Italian government seems to be emerging as the moral leader of the governments of Europe. How painful is the contrast between the moderation and justice of the Italian government at home and abroad and the new militarism of France.

"Roll Back Your Gates of Brixton Gaol"

IN Brixton prison, sad and wan, he lies,
MacSwiney, Mayor of Cork, Sinn Feiner true!
A British gaoler watches as he dies
Who every breath for God and country drew!

His life was pure, his purpose high,
No crime bestained his hands!
His loyal soul no gold could buy,
His name untarnished stands!

He broke no law, he wronged no man,
He filled his office well!
He stood for all the nobler things
For which McCurtain fell!

He simply spoke his country's right
To be a nation free,
And, braver, faced the tyrant's might,
Nor would enslaved be.

But British curse was on his land
With fire and sword and gun!
And England's military arm
Would crush this helpless one.

They take him in the dead of night—
Nor try him by his peers,
But rush him overseas to gaol—
His sentence—five long years!

For five long years to take his food
Out of the tyrant's hand!
For five long years to pine and sigh
For home and native land!

God bless you! Mayor MacSwiney, brave,
In wrong you'll have no share!
Nor food nor drink you'll take from them
Whose chains you're forced to wear!

And round about your dying bed
Humanity outraged stands
And calls on freemen everywhere
To echo its demands!

"Roll back your gates of Brixton gaol
And set this patriot free!
And break the chains that bind his land
And give it Liberty."

—James E. Cassidy in the New Bedford Standard.

Stars and Stripes

Poet Maeterlinck is suing his manager for $100,000. If he gets it, the poets all over our broad land will be likely to create openings for a large number of managers.

"Why don't you hunt for work?" the kind-hearted lady asked.

"Hunt for it!" the weary scranger exclaimed. "Ma'am, I'm all tired out tryin' to git away from it."

"Drive out some time and see us. We've got a dandy little place in the country. Flowers and a garden, and I'd like to have you see the kiddies."

"I'd enjoy it, old man, but"——

"And we still manage to have a cocktail now and then."

"How about tomorrow afternoon?"

Letters to the Editor

World Language

Editor Boston American:

Article X. in Mr. Wilson's "Fourteen Points" is being severely criticized, and justly so. Nothing of permanent good has ever been accomplished by force. In order to do away with wars forever we must practice the teachings of the meek Nazarene—there is no other way. To do this, we must be first well acquainted with his teachings and then be able to impart those teachings to our fellow-men. I honestly believe that the World's War would never have taken place had, for instance, all the German people been able to speak the English language and read the American newspapers.

If the "League of Nations" is really sincere, let the Governments of the World decide upon one language and then introduce it into their schools.

In less than fifty years the World would become a hundred per cent. better place to live in, and Christianity would be less preached, but more practiced.

ALEXANDER J. SHERER.

Narrow Gauge Service

Editor Boston American:

In accordance with your altruistic policies, I suggest that you agitate along the following lines: Convince the B., R. B. & L. R. R. that as a public utility its mission is service, and its practice of preventing its passengers from debarking from the ferry at East Boston by holding the gangplank raised, so common between 5 and 6 p. m., and so provoking these damp, drizzly nights, is not service, or at best a poor attempt. It might also be well to remind the same road that the ventilation (?) afforded by closed windows and transoms in musty cars that are seldom renovated is indicative of little regard for public health and comfort.

I know that when your paper brings pressure on these points it will get results.

Extraordinary Actions

Arthur Somers Roche once said that his method of writing was to develop the plot as he went along, and that half the time he didn't himself know just what his characters were going to do. In "Find the Woman" he has certainly made his characters do some extraordinary things, and we are inclined to think that he is following this principle. At any rate, once having started the story one will read it to the end.—October Cosmopolitan.

By K. C. B.

DEAR K. C. B.—We are two little girls, twelve and thirteen years old. We always read your Towne Gossip and we know you can help us. Last year we had a nurse, a pretty blonde one, with golden hair and a heart all gold. She was in our school and all the children loved her. She fixed boys' ties and girls' ribbons and petted little children and took our pulses and fevers. She was nice, but she would also tell our mothers to give us castor oil, which is awful bad.

Please write her in your paper to come back. She has been away, and a boy said she wouldn't come back because she was going to marry a man.

She is beautiful and she gave flowers to a poor little sick girl in my class, and my mamma says she got coal for a poor lady, and she goes to hospitals to see children when they are away from school sick. Her name is Helen. Please write her one of your nice letters.

RUTH AND LILLY.

DEAR RUTH and Lilly.
FIRST I thought.
I'D WRITE to Helen.
AND LET her know.
THAT YOU wanted her.
AND THEN I thought.
THAT MAYBE Helen.
HAD GONE away.
TO MARRY the man.
YOU SPEAK about.
AND IF she has.
I'M VERY sure.
YOU WOULDN'T ask.
SHE GIVE him up.
FOR YOU'LL agree.
I'M SURE of that.
THAT ALL the good.
SHE DID for you.
AND ALL the cheer.
SHE SPREAD about.
AND ALL the love.
SHE HAD for girls.
AND LITTLE boys.
MUST BE repaid.
AND IN her case.
PERHAPS THESE things.
EARNED HER the love.
OF SOME fine man.
AND IF they did.
IT WOULDN'T do.
TO BRING her back.
AND THEN just think.
IF SHE came back.
SHE MIGHT prescribe.
MORE CASTOR oil.
WHICH AS you say.
IS AWFUL bad.

I THANK you.

Mr. Cox in talking about political contributions by very rich men says, "The bankers expect returns for every dollar invested."

Very interesting—and so they do. One of the firm of J. Pierpont Morgan & Company invested more than a million dollars in the New York Evening Post. And the Evening Post, owned in the J. Pierpont Morgan office, comes out most solemnly "for the League of Nations and Cox." What do Morgan & Company expect for that Evening Post investment and support?

Colonel George Benton McClellan Harvey, to give him his full and original name, is out for Warren Gamaliel Harding, the "biggest, broadest and bravest American I know." This time Colonel Harvey thinks he has a "live one," one that will not die on him. But who knows? By March 5th the Colonel may be saying to Gamaliel:

"No more by thee, my steps shall be, forever and forever."

Politics is uncertain, especially when, like Harvey, you are absolutely unselfish.

Victor Lawson wrote a good editorial line, "Maybe France thought it best to recognize General Wrangel while he is still recognizable."

If you haven't seen a picture of General Wrangel, look through the illustrated papers, find one, and behold a dashing, handsome brigand with perfect "make up" for the movies. He looks like a first-class Cossack of another century. But his ability to deal successfully with Lenin, strange modern product, backed by one hundred and eighty million Russians, is doubtful. The French cannot be blamed, however, for backing the picturesque Wrangel while he is still recognizable. Lenin refuses to pay Frenchmen thirty thousand million francs that they lent the Czar. They want the money, and they ought to have it, for the money was lent largely by French workmen.

The Russian people ought not to celebrate their freedom from Czardom by confiscating the savings of millions of French workers.

Learn here something from Mr. Ponzi of Boston—not about finance, but about health. Ponzi, in prison, eats two peaches every day. He has a fine color, is healthy and cheerful. All the Latin races eat fruit and green salads, RAW. The fruits they peel. On the green salad they put vinegar and kill germs. Thus they supply the system with vitamins and live to a cheerful old age, instead of living, as many of us Americans do, to a dyspeptic middle age.

Anti-suffragists are much amused by their own witticisms based on the fact that the first woman jury ever selected in Indiana was asked to decide the ownership of a talking machine. However, it only took the women five minutes to settle the case, so that "the jury of talking machines," as the "antis" call it, showed speed and efficiency. How many juries of men know their minds so well?

International Exposition to Boom Boston

IDEAS and plans for an international exposition hereabouts to make New England better known to the wide world, have been rapidly taking form, and are described in a special article in tomorrow's Sunday Advertiser.

This industrial exposition is expected to mark a new era in Boston's commerce. The needs of the port of Boston are described by several experts.

Remarkable photographs of His Holiness the Pope and the visiting Knights of Columbus delegation to Rome from the United States will be another feature of tomorrow's Boston Sunday Advertiser.

Conditions in Boston which the municipal housing act was intended to relieve are infinitely worse now than when the legislation was in progress, declares Representative Hays of Brighton, in commenting on the in-rolling tide of evidence of rent profiteering and oppression of tenants, and Mayor Peters' refusal to take steps under the law for coming to the rescue of Bostonians.

Representative Essex S. Abbott of Springfield, chairman of the committee which handled all the rent and housing bills, is another who discusses in tomorrow's Boston Sunday Advertiser the Boston housing crisis.

Who said Boston girls weren't interested in the housing crisis? There's a tremendous shortage of courting parlors in the Hub! Where shall the lovelorn unmarried damsel who doesn't live with mamma hie to do her spooning? That's the problem that confronts thousands of young women in Boston.

Time was in the Summer nights just past when they could hold hands by the Dark of the Moon in the parks or on the sands, but now! There's only one community home for girls in the city that has spooning retreats, and they're dated ahead so far that many of the girls dread their being added to the already large army of Boston spinsters.

The world's first school for the scientific training of teachers for work among the blind opens at Harvard University this Fall. It aims to solve the problem of the lack of instructors for wage-earners suddenly cut off from their work by loss of sight.

In tomorrow's Boston Sunday Advertiser Miss Lotta S. Rand, executive secretary of this new school, tells of the work which will be accomplished in co-operation with the State Commission on the Blind, the Perkins Institution and the Massachusetts Association for Promoting the Interests of the Blind.

A great terminal market in Boston, where foreign and imported foodstuffs will be sold direct to the consumer, is proposed by public officials and by leading citizens. The army base in South Boston is suggested as a site for the sale of fruits, fish, garden truck from the suburbs and food brought here by the railroads.

Details of this plan to reduce the cost of living are fully described in tomorrow's Boston Sunday Advertiser.

Bay State delegates to the American Legion convention at Cleveland will take part in a debate that may change the political map of the United States. Despite the injunction in its constitution restraining the organization from delving in politics, the Hoosier members demand that the national body herald to the country the record of every Congressman and other public official on the bonus question.

The adoption of this policy by the convention would make the veterans' association a tremendous power in national affairs. In any event the Massachusetts men have instructions to support the forefold plan, or such other plans for compensation as will secure the desired objective.

YOUR FACE IS YOUR MIRROR

Did you ever stop to think seriously what the effect of emotions such as you allow to play on your facial muscles every day will be in after life when your just forming character lines get deep and set?

Do you realize how little it takes to upset our equilibrium?

And every little annoyance, every observed unpleasant detail, every not-to-your-satisfaction occurrence registers through the nerves in your face.

There are the fine oblique lines of sorrow in secret, or self-sacrifice which appear just above and to the side of the eyebrow, the full, puffy lines under the eyes which indicate the man of many words, spoken or written, the worry and care lines in the forehead, and the peculiarly deep wrinkles which surround the mouth.

Are you sure that you want the world to read your life in your face?

Then be more self-controlled.

It is all very well to have an expressive face, but it is far better to have an inscrutable look occasionally.

Keep some of your thoughts to yourself.
